D.C. Observes Gas Curfew, With Sales Rising 15%

Capital's Record Of Cooperation Better Than That Of Other Cities

Washington and 17 Eastern States joined the "Battle of the Atlantic" at 7 last night with a 12-hour gasoline sale blackout.

As far as could be immediately determined by police, the voluntary ban on night gas sales—requested as a national defense conservation measure by Petroleum Coordinator Ickes—got the cooperation of virtually all the District's 126 service stations which normally remain open for business during the night.

This cooperation, however, did not hold true over the rest of the gas blackout area, extending from Maine to Florida. The United Press reported that in New York City 25 per cent of the stations, all privately owned, were selling gas after the curfew.

Sales Jump 15 Per Cent Here

Approximately 100,000 filling stations and garages along the Eastern Coast participated in the sales blackout, affecting 11 million of the Nation's 33 million motorists. Truckers, taxi drivers, doctors and other emergency workers were exempted from the restrictions.

Despite the night ban, however, yesterday's gas and oil sales jumped an estimated 15 per cent in Washington, and as high as 30 per cent in some sections of the Midatlantic States.

Harry R. Wainwright, research director for the Retail Gasoline Dealers Association here, last night calculated from incomplete reports that the average boost in motor fuel purchases ranged from 10 to 25 per cent in key District stations.

Extra Tanks Used

The reason for the increase in sales, instead of the desired drop, was that most motorists ordered the station attendants to "fill 'er up" instead of getting their usual five gallons or one dollar's worth. Some took the precaution of filling an extra five gallon can with gasoline and storing it in the trunk compartment.

As the 7 o'clock "Gasoline Saving Time" approached, gas stations did a boom business, and driveways of the large dealers actually became clogged with anxious customers.

While officials who sponsored the voluntary night sales blackout looked forward to substantial decrease in consumption through the plan, fear was expressed in some quarters that the ban might prove to be a boomerang and tend to increase sales and consumption, as it did yesterday.

Gas curfew sponsors felt that yesterday's boom was a natural re-

Roosevelt Sails On a Carefree Vacation Cruise

New London, Conn., Aug. 3.—President Roosevelt put out to sea tonight for a carefree vacation on salt water.

Aboard the White House yacht Potomac, he left the Navy's submarine base here and began a voyage scheduled for a week or ten days unless a serious turn in world events sends him back to Washington.

For the present the cares of his high office and of a Nation feeling the impact of a world at war were cast aside. Mr. Roosevelt's major concern shifted to such nautical problems as the turn of the tide, the depth of anchorage, and the way the fish were running.

Life Savings of Woman, 74, Stolen From Under Mattress

PORTRAIT IN WOE—Mrs. Rosie Fones, of 416 Third Street Northwest, whose life savings were stolen from mattress

By Scott Hart
Post Staff Writer

People from the neighborhood of 416 Third Street Northwest went to the hall room of Mrs. Rose Fones, 74, yesterday with worried faces, saying "Grandma, why did you put your money under the mattress? Why didn't you put it in a bank?"

She tried to explain it. Of course, the $1,167 and some odd change, when kept close to hand, might be looked at every day. This is comforting when an old woman has no relatives and lives alone in a hall room, picking up some odd change from small jobs. The change will carry you along from day to day; but against the indefinite future are the eleven hundred dollars, certain, sure and there for the eyes to see.

Last Thursday night Mrs. Fones drew a little on her reserve to pay the room rent. Then, at 7 p. m. Saturday she lifted the mattress again to take 10 cents for bread.

The money was gone.

Former Roomer Held

The police last night reported arrest of a man in Bristol, Tenn., in connection with the theft. They said he was formerly a roomer in the house where Mrs. Fones lives.

In the meantime Mrs. Fones hasn't a penny.

She has a lesson, of course, but still, apparently, doesn't understand that people would do a thing like that.

She brooded over it yesterday in her room, where she has a small brightly colored picture of the Nativity on her dresser to look at and catch a quiet peace, if she can, and a rocking chair for her comfort.

Sold Virginia Land

She also has recollections. They include the fine big people she watched from distances when she was 17 years old, in 1884, and worked in the famous National Hotel at Sixth Street and Pennsylvania Avenue. Later she had saved something and bought some land in Richmond County, Va., where she was born. Taxes began eating it up and a year ago she sold it. That was where the $1,100 came from.

"I'd been keeping it a right smart while and I wanted to keep it until I really needed it. I'd been doing a little work for the Volunteers of America but I had this other for times when I couldn't do anything at all," she said to callers.

Mrs. Fones is normally active for her age. Her whole time is spent in the room—where there is a gas stove, a water sink, a couple of chairs, a table and the iron-steaded bed—and in her short walks to the Volunteers building on the corner.

Boy Picnicker Is Drowned In C. & O. Canal

BULLETIN

Mrs. Sauftine Rider, 40, 918 Independence Avenue Southeast, succumbed to traffic injuries at 2:40 a. m. today, a few hours after her daughter, Betty, had died from injuries in the same accident.

A nine-year-old boy was drowned, two persons were killed on a nearby highway, and a tourist collapsed in the Monument yesterday, when 89-degree heat sent thousands to country or beaches.

DONALD GILBERT

The drowning victim was Donald B. Gilbert, son of Mr. and Mrs. Gilbert, 501 Seward Square Southeast. The youngster's body was recovered from the C. & O. Canal near Brookmont, Md., after he had wandered off from a party of friends with whom he was on a picnic outing.

Betty Rider, 15, of 916 Independence Southwest, suffered a fatal injury when the automobile in which she was riding overturned near Bristol, Md. She was taken to Casualty Hospital along with four other injured occupants of the car. Others hurt were: Mrs. Sauftine Rider, 40, her mother, possible neck injuries and shock; Betram R. Spittle, 24, of Alexandria, Va., abrasions and contusions; Thomas Crowell, 17, of 915 Virginia Avenue, Southwest, fractured ankle; and Jay West, 18, of 1102 Virginia Avenue, Southwest, contusions and abrasions.

Virtually at the same spot where Miss Rider was killed, a farmhand was struck and fatally injured by a hit and run motorist.

Woman Wanting to Stagger Books, Babies Wins Novel Prize

Boston, Aug. 3 (AP).—Judith Kelly English, wife of a Boston lawyer whose ambition when she started writing six years ago was to "efficiently stagger babies and books—one of a kind on alternate years"—today was awarded the $10,000 Harper Prize given annually for the best novel by unsung writers.

Her winning effort, "Marriage Is a Private Affair," deals with a study of the first few uncertain years of an American marriage.

This was her second novel. Her first, "It Won't Be Flowers," was published in 1936 and made, she says with a smile, "The large noise of a feather falling on velvet."

Mrs. English's family was well-to-do and she says "I had far too many clothes and too much pocket money."

During her last year at Vassar, the financial crash of 1929 wiped out their savings and that's when she was forced "for the first time in my life to do a little real work."

"Quite astonishingly," she says, "it turned out to be fun."

She did no writing until after her marriage.

"I remember now, when I began writing, I promised myself that I would efficiently stagger babies and books—one of a kind on alternate years," she says. "Whenever I think of that neat, admirable plan I don't know whether to laugh or to burst into tears. Six years have passed and there are only two children and two books. My hope is to do much, much better in the next ten."

Murray Dissents

By William V. Nessly

The long fight over compulsory joint income returns by married couples, due to be climaxed by a House vote today, was further complicated last night when the C. I. O. announced its support of the provision but attacked in general the $3,528,200,000 tax bill of which it is a part.

The entire revenue measure, largest in the country's history, also may reach the final passage stage today.

Foes of the joint return provision, headed by Speaker Rayburn, had been encouraged over the weekend by President Roosevelt's eleventh-hour letter to the Ways and Means Committee favoring three changes, including modification of the joint return requirement, in the bill.

Supporters Still in Fight

The Ways and Means group's prompt rejection of the Presidential requests by no means ended the fight by the Rayburn forces, and the noon convening of the House today is expected to bring prompt resumption of the battle.

Philip Murray, president of the C. I. O., came to the support of the joint return clause last night, however, terming it "the greatest gain for labor and for sound taxation in the bill." He urged support of the provision, declaring that if adopted it "will close one of the most serious loopholes in the income tax system, a loophole through which many wealthy taxpayers have avoided paying the proper taxes."

The tax bill as a whole, Murray said, however, "increases the burden on working class incomes," while "it has failed to establish the kind of excess profits tax, along with high income and estate taxes, which would effectively reach war profits and excessive private fortunes."

Limited to Single Issue

Mr. Roosevelt also asked the Ways and Means Committee to revise its bill in order to include the Treasury's "invested capital" formula for excess profits taxation, a formula twice rejected previously by the committee, and to lower the individual income tax exemption. Under the rule adopted for consideration of the tax bill, however,

By the Associated Press

Russia claimed early today she was holding her own against a slow but admittedly heavy German push deep into the grain-yellow Russian Ukraine, the new danger spot in the continent-spanning system of Russian defenses.

The Soviet communique in Moscow declared the Germans and Russians were locked in combat throughout Sunday in the Smolensk, Korosten, and Bel Tserkov directions and on the Estonian sector with "no changes in disposition of troops on the front."

Besides the heavy fighting on land, Russia reported an "enemy" submarine was sunk in the Baltic Sea and an 8,000-ton German supply ship laden with arms and ammunition for the German-Finnish army sunk off Norway by Soviet submarines.

Nazi Gains Admitted

Moscow acknowledged that the Nazi legions, although bleary-eyed from a regular schedule of only two hours' sleep daily, had pushed the great Russian-German battle into the regions of Korosten, 80 miles northwest of Kiev, and Bel Tserkov, less than 30 miles south of Kiev. Yet the Ukrainian capital, at whose gates the Germans said they were pounding a fortnight ago, still stood.

German dispatches agreed that the best progress was being made in the Ukraine south of the provincial capital, with the push in the hands of "encirclement specialists" seeking to reduce the admittedly ferocious Russian resistance.

But the Russians said they were harvesting their grain—a bumper crop of unprecedented proportions—at a whirlwind pace, and declared a "new phase of violent and decisive battles" was at hand.

Cavalry Lock in Charge

The Germans, more liberal with details on the Estonian sector, said they had captured 10,000 Russians west of Lake Peipus and had "liquidated" a "fractional" part of the outer defenses of Leningrad. The D.N.B. official German news agency added that in the northern sector a panzer division killed 2,300 Russians, captured other thousands, and seized 71 tanks. It said a Russian army corps general had been captured at an undisclosed point.

Smolensk, the western approach to Moscow which has been the scene of titanic conflict for nearly three weeks, still was mentioned by the Russians as a zone of bitter fighting, but the Germans ignored it.

Britain Soon to Invade Finland In Arctic, London Rumors Say

By Drew Middleton,
Associated Press Staff Writer

London, Aug. 3.—Hints that Britain may soon open a northern European front of her own on Germany's flank to help Russia abounded in London this quiet holiday weekend.

Britain is known to have prepared a shock force for just such a job.

Rumors—in many ways similar to those which preceded the outbreak of the Russian-German war—have flooded London in the last 48 hours. The latest and apparently most authentic was a report from Goteborg, Sweden, that a large British fleet was operating in the Arctic Sea.

(It is noteworthy that Middleton's entire dispatch moved through British censorship. Either an actual operation, such as suggested by the London rumors, or enough currency to the rumors alone might, in the British view, serve to divert considerable German forces).

It is obvious that Britain could best employ seapower in an amphibious operation some distance from German air resources and near occupied territory in which resistance to German rule is believed to be growing.

This strategic consideration influences neutral observers to believe that an operation might take place in northern Finland, possibly near Petsamo and Rybachi Peninsula, at the northernmost point of the common Russian-Finnish frontier. Petsamo is a Finnish port and the peninsula is Russian territory.

Such a campaign would have a twofold objective: Opening of a line of supplies between this country and Russia, a line now menaced by German warships at Petsamo and other northern ports, and heartening of Norwegians, whose undercover resistance to the German occupying forces has resulted in rigid German regulations.

If a naval preparation by bombing and shelling were successful, troops would be likely to follow.

Fires Like 'Heaving Volcano' Were Left In German Capital, R. A. F. Fliers Assert

By the Associated Press

London (Monday), Aug. 4.—The R. A. F. machine-gunned German troops and war stations in northern France in widespread Sunday assaults after hurling a mighty armada—said to number between 200 and 300 planes—against Berlin in a big Saturday night raid.

Patrol vessels, aircraft on the ground, gun posts and an airdrome as well as Nazi troops were attacked by the R. A. F. in low level daylight Sunday raids, the air ministry announced early today. It added four Nazi fighters were destroyed to one British craft.

Hardly had these raiders returned before squadron after squadron of R. A. F. craft swung across the Channel again last night, plastering coastal bases with bombs whose explosions lit up this side of the Channel. They still were at it long past midnight.

Flashes Light Coast

The bomb flashes, mingled with the glare of flares and German antiaircraft shells provided a fiery display for watchers on the British Channel coast.

The night operations opened up against the Calais area. From Calais the assault progressed to Boulogne and Cap Gris Nez, British bombs in France rattling windows and doors on the Kent coast.

These night raids and the far-flung Sunday sweeps plunged the R. A. F. into the eighth week of its sustained offensive against Germany and Germany-held continental targets.

A German plane dropped a single bomb on a northeast British coast town early today, demolishing two houses, killing three persons and injuring 10. Three others are missing.

Defense Fire Scattered

This lone attack followed a brief bombing on the southeast coast Sunday afternoon which the home security ministry said caused some damage and casualties and resulted in destruction of a Nazi bomber.

The Saturday night raid on Berlin—the fiftieth of the war—started fires which one pilot related he saw heaving "like a volcano" while he was homeward bound, 80 miles away.

[The attack on Berlin, according to the United Press, was described authoritatively as the worst since the night of April 9, when British bombs smashed down the broad Unter Den Linden, destroyed the

Picked British Army Massed On Thai Border

Thailand Also Moves Up Men as Japanese Roll Toward Frontier

By Relman Morin

Saigon, French Indo-China, Aug. 3. The British have placed thousands of their finest troops, mainly tough Australians and the pick of the best Indian regiments, on the Malaya-Thailand border in expectation of a showdown with the Japanese.

They are fully equipped not only with tanks and heavy artillery but also with secret weapons especially designed for jungle warfare.

These things I have just seen after covering the entire area outside Singapore, traveling by train, bicycle and finally by ox-cart across the No-Man's territory between Thailand and Indo-China. The frontier is still closed despite the cessation of hostilities, and no newspaperman had been there since a Dutch correspondent was killed in the border warfare last November.

150 Pilots on Hand

Everywhere along the border were British forces, including a new contingent of 150 R. A. F. pilots and crews who arrived recently. Moreover, the British are preparing room for additional thousands of Australian infantrymen.

All of these preparations are the result of the British belief in Singapore that Japan is exerting and will continue to exert pressure on Thailand for naval and air bases.

The atmosphere in Bangkok is one of extreme uncertainty. Some sections of the Thai government seem to regret having accepted the Japanese mediation of the dispute with Indo-China, and feel that it is impossible to refuse whatever proposals Japan may make.

Well-informed sources in Bangkok assert flatly that Japan is de-

Petain Hints He's Reached Vital Decision

Will Yield Popularity To 'Save France' In U.S.-Nazi Squeeze

By Ralph E. Heinzen
United Press Staff Writer

Vichy, Aug. 3.—Marshal Petain, faced with a choice between fresh Nazi pressure and a stern United States warning, was quoted by his minister of information in the cabinet today as saying he is ready to "give up my popularity" for the salvation of France.

The 85-year-old marshal's cryptic statement was revealed by Paul Marion of the Vichy cabinet during a speech at Marseilles and was regarded as indicating that Petain is on the verge of a vital decision as regards extended "collaboration" with Germany and Saturday's warning by Sumners Welles, acting Secretary of State.

Stand Against Threats

(The British radio said the meaning of Petain's statement was obscure and that it was still a matter of conjecture whether he is ready to submit to Germany's new demands or defy them and "whether this means his popularity with the French people or with the Germans.")

Marion said Petain made the statement to one of his ministers when leaving Saturday's council of ministers.

"Thus far I have given France only my person, but I am ready, for the salvation of the country, to give my popularity," the chief of the French state asserted.

During the council of ministers, it was understood, Petain, Vice Premier Admiral Darlan and Gen. Maxime Weygand stood in a solid bloc against new Nazi pressure, said to include a threat to treat all of

On the morning of last May 30, The Post, on the basis of numerous dispatches received from areas of camps, plane factories and other American defense establishments, reported:

Troops' leaves at Fort Custer, Mich., were suddenly canceled, Fort Dix soldiers on leave were being rounded up at New York and ordered back to the post, soldiers were placed around aviation factories on the West Coast, and heavy guards were put on waterfront duty in many cities.

Today, J. Flight for Freedom

2 Belgians Who Escaped Nazis Tell How First Effort Failed

The two Belgian air officers, whose recent escape to England from Belgium, in a training plane stolen almost directly under the noses of the Nazis, was one of the most thrilling episodes of the war thus far, tell the story of their exploit in a series of interviews, the first of which follows.—(Editor's note.)

London, Aug. 3.—"We wanted freedom and we wanted to fight Hitler, so here we are!"

Two young Belgian air force reserve pilots thus dismissed, with a nod of their heads today, the dramatic exploit of their escape from German-controlled Belgium in a stolen airplane.

Their real names cannot be divulged, for both have left dear ones behind them in Belgium who might be made to suffer. So we shall call them by the pseudonyms they have chosen "for the duration"—that is, until Belgium is freed again: Pilot Officers "Jean Qevers" and "Jacques Dubois."

Jean, 24, a slight, nervous youth, who was a business student before the war, and Jacques, 25, a Flemish mechanical genius, managed to repair an ancient Belgian air force training plane under the very noses of German sentries and fly to the freedom of England.

Nazis Held in Ukraine Battle, Reds Claim; Berlin Reports Break-Through

Fight Rages Along Front Of 600 Miles

By the United Press

Moscow (Monday), Aug. 4.—The Red army today reported a stone-wall defense of Kiev against a German encircling drive along a 150-mile arc and the recapture of two villages in counterattacks that threw the Germans back still further from the Smolensk gateway to Moscow.

The Russian high command said that on Sunday, as the "greatest battle in history" entered its seventh week, Soviet forces battled the Germans with unabated fierceness from Estonia southward 600 miles to the Byelaya-Tserkov region 45 miles south of Kiev.

The official Russian army organ, Red Star, said that a Russian division, in 40 days of uninterrupted fighting, had driven through the German lines, recaptured the Polish city of Przemysl, held it for a time and "emerged virtually intact."

350 Miles West of Kiev

Przemysl, 58 miles west of the Polish Ukrainian capital of Lwow, lies 145 miles beyond the pre-war Polish-Russian boundary and nearly 350 miles west of Kiev.

The German war machine, said to have lost more than 1,500,000 men in the last six weeks of "blitzkrieg-shattering" by the Red army, was described in an official communique Sunday as being in "complete exhaustion" at many points along the front and no longer able to launch attacks.

This "complete exhaustion" among many German units, the high command said, is due to the fact that the German soldiers are being given only two hours sleep out of every 24 in the savage fighting, leading to "mass outbreaks" of hysteria and near-craziness.

Regular Red army units and civilian guerrillas operating deep behind the German lines were said to be maintaining almost constant contact with Russian staff headquarters.

Today's communique describing Sunday's fighting told of continued, vital battles raging in the "Estonian Sector" west and southwest of Leningrad, around the Smolensk region 230 miles west of Moscow and in the attempted German encirclement of Kiev.

But nowhere, it was stated, were there any important changes in the military positions, indicating that for the last 24 hours the Germans had been held to a vital standstill.

Within 45 Miles of Kiev

Fighting appeared to be raging night and day around the approaches to Kiev, around Korosten, 90 miles northwest of the city and around Byelaya-Tserkov, barely 45 miles from the city on the south.

Marshal Semyon Budenny's Ukrainian Red army forces, it was indicated, were battling fiercely to prevent the Germans from tightening an arc of encirclement reaching from the vicinity of the highway and railroad center of Korosten, down 50 miles through Zhitomir—unmentioned in today's communique or in Sunday's communiques—then swinging southeastward across the rugged country to the Byelaya-Tserkov sector.

The high command gave no details of the northern Estonian fighting, but other Moscow reports placed it in southern Estonia, somewhere west of Lake Peipus, and dispatches to Moscow newspapers said the Estonian capital of Tallinn remained firmly in Russian hands.

Today's communique reported new Russian successes in the air-naval fighting for domination of the Baltic, vital to the fate of Leningrad, and said that another German submarine had been sunk there.

Arms Ship Sunk in Arctic

[Off northern Norway an 8,000-ton German steamer "laden with arms and ammunition for the German-Finnish army" was sunk by Soviet submarines, the Associated Press reported.]

In a bombing attack on Rumania's Black Sea port of Constanta on Friday night, it added, a floating dock with a destroyer in it was hit, as well as several ships in the harbor.

The Red air force was credited with bringing down 33 enemy planes Saturday, including two shot down during the Luftwaffe's eleventh "futile" attempt to subject Moscow to mass aerial attack Saturday night and early Sunday. The Russians lost 19 planes.

[Scattered German planes broke through Moscow's night defenses in a raid on the capital last night and early today, but their bombs failed to damage any military objectives, it was claimed here, the Associated Press reported.]

The Red air fleet, supporting the Red army, continued to blast German mechanized forces moving up to the front, infantry columns and artillery placements.

The Red army organ Red Star, describing the reported temporary recapture of Przemysl, said it was carried out by the Red army's crack Ninety-ninth Division which in 40 days of constant fighting smashed at least six German regiments on the central front.

Describing the Red army's technique of smashing the Nazis' "panzer" assaults, officers of the Ninety-ninth Division were quoted as saying that instead of attempting to hold a rigid front line the Russians retreat tactically to prepared positions having the most favorable terrain.

Sufficient forces are left in advance positions to "absorb the shock" of the German blows, after which other Red army forces, hidden in woods and fields of tall ripening wheat, slash in upon the flanks of the enemy, it was explained.

On the vital central front before Moscow, where the Germans have suffered perhaps their bloodiest losses, the recapture of two villages in Red army counter-attacks was reported in dispatches from the front.

The Germans' 156th regiment was "destroyed" and the Nazi general in command of the sixteenth division was killed in the taking of one of the towns, the other village was described as "strategically important."

The official government organ Isvestia, describing "the failure of the blitzkrieg," asserted today that several entire Nazi divisions have been wiped out but warned that "the enemy is still very strong and despite his huge losses he is still trying to invade new territory."

Thai Troops Massing

In the meantime the Thai armies are pouring into the new border zones. At least three long and heavily-laden troop trains leave Bangkok daily and I passed long double lines of cavalry near the border.

Whether this means that Thailand may fight to prevent Japan entering from Indo-China nobody professes to know.

Crossing the new boundary of Indo-China I stayed overnight with a lone French immigration official who lives in Cambodia in a bamboo hut. Later I stayed with other French families.

The French can take it. These people were living in bare unfurnished houses on deserted land, but they were optimistic.

On my trip I passed large detachments of the Japanese army en route to Cambodia, purring along in new American-made trucks, carrying heavy artillery and full supplies of gasoline. The soldiers seem exceptionally young. They were very polite.

Press Attacks Leahy

The government today studied Welles' warning of a threatened break in diplomatic relations but withheld any official comment. Many observers stated that there was "nothing in Vichy's attitude at present" which would provoke such a break.

The German-controlled Paris press today launched bitter attacks on the diplomatic activity at Vichy of United States Ambassador Admiral William D. Leahy who held friendly conferences with Petain and Darlan on Friday.

"Our one idea (I translate from Jean's French) was to get to England and fight! There was revenge to be won from the Rexists (Belgian Fascists) and defeat to be dealt to the Germans."

First Attempt Failed

Sitting in the Free Belgian War Ministry in London with these two pilot officers in R. A. F. blue with the word "Belge" on their shoulders, it's hard to believe that only a few weeks ago their first attempt to escape had failed and they believed themselves doomed to remain in Nazi-occupied Belgium.

Outside, a hot summer sun was melting London's tar in street and sidewalk; newsboys were hawking the latest editions of the Russian war news; flower merchants and food delivery fans went through the street on the corner of which a demolition squad was cleaning up a bomb scar.

When I entered the free Belgian war ministry I found Jean against the window staring at the scene before him. Overhead, the city's protective squadrons of Spitfires droned high above the fat, wallowing balloons. Big Ben was chiming above the noise of downtown traffic which faintly reached this exclusive west end residential sector.

"It is alive; vibrant!" Jean exclaimed to me. "It is not so at home. Belgium is asleep! No! She has fainted from the ravages of her attacker!" He slapped the window sill, then smiled and offered me a cigarette.

Sentries Guard Road

By questioning closely, I pulled their story from them; Jacques sitting quietly in his chair smoking and Jean nervously returning to the window every few minutes still amazed at the sight of London.

"Our first plans of escape were made at dinner one night," Jacques said. "We met in a little cafe and decided that somehow we had to get out of Belgium to England. The air was the only likely way but it seemed a hopeless task to steal an airplane. Then Jean thought of the old trainer."

Jean, from the window:

"I remembered a trainer used for weekend reservist work which had been hangared in a barn on an auxiliary airfield—a cow-pasture—and we decided to try and visit it."

That very night they took their bicycles and rode outside Antwerp to the small airport. As they neared the field, their hearts sank.

Second Japanese Tanker Departs Without U. S. Oil

San Francisco, Aug. 3 (AP).—A second empty Japanese tanker slipped back to sea today.

Shortly after daybreak the Daisan Ogura Maru cleared the Golden Gate, presumably to retrace her futile, 5,500-mile voyage for oil for Japan's war machine.

Shipping circles assumed the tanker would return to Japan. Some expressed the opinion, however, both the Daisan and the Nissyo Maru which, also empty, left San Pedro yesterday, might join ten or more other tankers believed to be cruising somewhere off the coast.

Meanwhile, two of Japan's finest liners—the Tatuta Maru, in San Francisco, and the Heian Maru, in Seattle—were completing unloading of valuable raw silk cargoes having a total value of about $3,500,000.

The Tatuta, which came in at San Francisco last Wednesday after seven days of aimless sailing off the Golden Gate, was expected to sail early tomorrow. Numerous maritime libel actions which had been filed against the ship were suspended last night by Federal Judge Martin I. We...

Mexican Senator Demands Ouster Of German Envoy

Mexico City, Aug. 3 (AP).—Suggestions that Mexico demand recall of the German minister and oust Nazi consuls rose today as political leaders and newspapers indorsed the government's firm rejection of a German note urging it to protest against the Washington blacklist of pro-Axis Mexican firms.

Senator Alfonso Flores, president of the Senate's foreign relations committee, said German Minister Rudt von Collenberg should be declared "persona non grata" immediately for his "discourteous and insolent" note.

An informed government source declared closing of German consulates was being seriously considered and termed the note "a deliberate provocation of a warring nation" to endanger relations between Mexico and the United States.

Tanks Behind Soviet Lines, Germans Say

By the Associated Press

Berlin, Aug. 3.—German reports of the Russian war indicated tonight that the best progress of the Nazi forces was being made in the Ukraine, far south of the provincial capital of Kiev.

Dispatch after dispatch from the fighting zones emphasized the bitterness of the Russian resistance, while stressing the heavy Red losses wherever the two armies were in contact. There were inimations, though, that the eastern campaign was exacting many German sacrifices.

Claim Victory in Estonia

The outstanding official announcement concerning the eastern front was the high command's communique which said that 10,000 Russians had been captured west of Lake Peipus in Estonia, and that "many tanks, cannon and other war material" had been seized.

D. N. B., official news agency, said a panzer division had won valuable ground in the northwest, capturing thousands of Russians, 71 light and heavy tanks, and leaving 2,300 Russians dead or wounded in heavy fighting.

A fractional but nevertheless important part of the outer defenses of Leningrad has been "liquidated," the Germans claimed. (Apparently nothing further was given to support this claim. Days ago the Germans said their panzer forces were east of Lake Peipus, pushing on the old czarist capital. At its nearest point the lake is little more than 100 miles from Leningrad.)

The news from the Ukraine front was still unofficial but press dispatches were making much of the reported break through the lines south of Kiev and German tanks which are in command of encirclement specialists were reported running freely in the plains area. The reports said "numerous new encirclements" have been accomplished in the region.

It was admitted though that the Russians were making desperate attempts to break out of the rings of tanks. These attempts the dispatches said were being repulsed with severe losses.

[The official D. N. B. news agency reported, according to the United Press, capture of a Russian general commanding an army corps but mentioned neither his name nor corps number. The general disclosed, D. N. B. said, that the Red army has suffered extreme losses and is affected by a food shortage.

[Many Soviet regiments have been reduced to 250 or 300 men, the general was reported saying, and many army corps no longer have tank units. Some Russian armies were said to consist now of only one or two divisions.]

In the vast battle area the Germans were said to be "keeping closely on the heels" of the slowly withdrawing Russians, while the Nazi airforce was especially active. One unit of fliers claimed the destruction of eight tanks and 423 motor vehicles, 30 cannons and five trains.

Vital Rail Line Blasted

Trains also were attacked on the Moscow-Leningrad rail line, the Nazis claiming that six were derailed and the tracks smashed in many places. The Russians were reported to be making swift repairs only to have the damage renewed by the Luftwaffe.

An attack by Nazi planes on the Murmansk region, far above the Arctic Circle, also was reported. German reports said that fortifications in that area,, as well as moving columns and two trains, were effectively bombed.

The high command's communique, speaking of the Battle of the Atlantic, said the air force destroyed six merchant vessels, two of them tankers, in convoys off the east coast of England.. The total tonnage was 40,000, the communique said. Another freighter was damaged, and still another set afire near the Faroe Islands.

Moscow was again bombed by stronger forces, the high command said. An official news agency dispatch said the raid was carried out under cloudless skies and that the fliers easily picked out war industries and started numerous fires.

D. N. B. said an Italian expeditionary force had arrived by train in the southern sector of the eastern front and would be thrown into battle within the next few days. The agency described the Italians as "elite troops out of the northern Italian provinces with excellent equipment."

Apparently they will be placed alongside the Rumanians and Hungarians in that area.

D. N. B., denying that the German regiment, "Gross Deutschland," had lost several thousand dead, said the regiment's losses in six weeks of fighting were only 12 officers and 260 men.

ABC Board to Act On Time Change

Richmond, Va., Aug. 3 (AP).—The Virginia Alcoholic Beverage Control Board probably will consider this week Gov. Price's "persuasive" proclamation for the adoption of daylight-saving time in Virginia, August 10, an official of the board said today.

The present regulation, banning the sale of beer and wine between midnight and 8 a. m., states specifically that these hours are in Eastern Standard Time, the board official pointed out, adding that a new order by the board, which has the effect of law, would be necessary to halt beer and wine sales an hour earlier when Virginia clocks are moved up.

Superbrain Trust Mobilizing U. S. Ingenuity for Defense

Research Office Is Open to Suggestions And Tests All It Gets

By the Associated Press

A super brain trust designed to out-think any other nation in the world is being organized in the United States.

President Roosevelt has assigned a calm, quiet engineer, Dr. Vannevar Bush, president of the Carnegie Institution of Washington, to direct the Office of Scientific and Development which will put the Nation's brain power behind national defense.

The men and women he is authorized to call on form an international scientific military division of more than 20,000, including experts in everything from weather forecasting to bacteriology, medicine, chemistry, physics and zoology.

He has at his command the services of virtually every American scientist and the refugee group now teaching and studying in American universities.

Open to Ideas

But with $10,000,000 jingling in their pockets Dr. Bush and other members of the group in the Office of Scientific Research and Development are not on a spending spree. If you offered them a 10-cent pencil for a nickel they would have it analyzed before buying it.

There is no idea offered them which is not given attention and no inventor is refused a hearing. About 95 per cent of the suggestions submitted prove to be worthless, but the scientists are constantly on the lookout for the other 5 per cent, which, if fitted into the jigsaw puzzle of what is known and what is not known, may produce a machine or instrument vital to national defense.

The financial demands of the scientists working under the direction of the officials of the OSRD are infinitesimal in comparison with the results produced. Research ordinarily returns tenfold the cost of the necessary studies.

Aside from the mammoth industrial and Government laboratories throughout the country there are thousands of small laboratories where the future Edisons, Steinmetzs, Curies and Pasteurs are at work. Often all they ask is $100 or $500 as a research grant to buy or build a new machine, a new piece of apparatus or chemicals necessary to carry out an experiment.

Seek Safe Engine Fuel

For example, at least 500 chemists are working on the problem of producing a new kind of gasoline or other propulsive fuel which will explode only in the cylinders of the motor of an airplane, tank or automobile.

Perhaps it will require the outlay of thousands of dollars to develop it. On the other hand it may come out of one of the tiny hole-in-the wall laboratories.

The result? A safety fuel which would not explode in the open air or in tanks. A bomb dropped into it would be smothered instead of blowing up the fuel in a mile-high explosion. That in itself would give the United States a long lead over any foreign government.

DR. VANNEVAR BUSH

Many chemists and physicists are hard at work developing new steel and aluminum alloy for high-speed operations. Electrochemists are working out methods of bonding aluminum to steel to create airplane and other engines which will triple the horsepower output with the same amount of fuel—that has been done on an experimental scale.

Biochemists are working continuously to develop new drugs, new chemicals and many synthetic vitamins and anesthetics to combat disease—eternally seeking to better the products of nature and to make the United States independent of foreign sources of such materials as opium, which ordinarily comes from Persia, and quinine, the principal source of which is the Netherlands East Indies.

Surgery in the Field

With the aid of grants from Dr. Bush's fund and from various other government and private endowments, traveling laboratories and hospitals are being developed. Such automobile companies as Ford, General Motors and Chrysler have designed custom-built machines in which an operating team of a surgeon and two nurses can carry medical attention to the front instead of waiting for an ambulance to deliver wounded men 20 miles to the rear to a base hospital.

Also they will be able to apply one of the newest discoveries of science—transfusions of blood plasma, the part remaining when the white and red blood corpuscles are shaken out. That life-saving discovery came out of one of the smallest of laboratories—the office of a young country doctor in Salisbury, N. C. Today hundreds of gallons are being used throughout the United States and England to counteract shock and save lives.

200 R. A. F. Planes Batter Berlin

[Scores of Britain's new superbombs of secret construction were dropped on the heart of Berlin in Saturday night's attack.]

The ministry, sparing of words, did not disclose the number of participating planes, merely observing that "a really strong force of four and two engined bombers" took part. Loss of four was acknowledged.

But the air ministry news service, quoting R. A. F. pilots, said the raid was terrific, and that Hamburg was just as fiercely attacked and damage done to docks, railways and industry.

"I think we gave Berliners their money's worth," one pilot was quoted as saying.

So many planes flew over the city, the air ministry news service said, that German antiaircraft gunners found it impossible to concentrate on one plane and thus the British were fairly free to dump their lethal loads.

The captain of one four-engined bomber said he had no difficulty finding the heart of the capital.

"Shells were bursting only a few feet beneath us," he said, "but we got through. My rear gunner told me he could see clouds of black smoke coming up after our bombs hit the mark.

"Our flares had lighted up the buildings at which we were aiming."

(A German communique minimized the extent of the night raids, declaring that the British dropped "a small number of explosive and incendiary bombs" on some communities in northwest and northern Germany, and characterized the forces which drove on Berlin as "weak." Because of strong antiaircraft fire only a few individual planes reached the heart of the city, the Germans said).

The Berlin raid was the second since the present R. A. F. offensive began. The first was on July 25.

British Railroads Bombed

Berlin, Aug. 3 (U.P.).—German bombers attacked English railroads at Broadstairs, near Margate, today with "particular success," causing considerable damage with several heavy caliber direct hits, the official news agency D. N. B. reported.

Unrest Acute In Rumania, Turks Hear

By John Grover
Associated Press Staff Writer

Istanbul, Turkey, Aug. 3 (Delayed) Mutterings of discontent and reports of disturbances throughout German-dominated eastern and central Europe are heard in Turkey, where travelers and diplomats are constantly adding to the information of correspondents.

The unrest is said to be particularly acute in Rumania where Rumanian troops are reported to have suffered severely in their offensive against Soviet Russia, and in Bulgaria where pro-Russian peasants continue to feel bitterly about the German attack on the Soviet.

Mass arrests of alleged Communists in Bulgaria are said to have failed to stop the activities of pro-Russian groups.

Rumanian sources estimate that 8,600 Jews have been slaughtered on the ground that they were pro-Russian.

Rumanians Want to Quit

A well informed source said the Transylvanian question again has risen to embitter Rumanian-German relations.

This source said the Rumanians were promised not only Bessarabia but also a readjustment of Transylvanian territory for joining in the attack on Russia.

Having regained Bessarabia, the Rumanians were said now to wish to stop hard fighting. To goad them on, the Germans were reported to be threatening that if the Rumanians quit they may lose more of Transylvania to Hungary, which received a big slice last year.

Arrivals from Greece said Germans there are openly contemptuous of their Italian allies who have succeeded them as occupation forces, but that the Germans in turn seem to be hated by all other Axis associates.

Chaos Reported Behind Lines

Germany's difficulties in Russia were highlighted by a Reuters, Britnews agency, story from Ankara today quoting military observers as saying that "complete chaos" reigns behind the German advance lines.

Contrary to German reports of "encirclement" of Russian forces by these deep thrusts, these observers said the Germans were constantly threatened and beset by the forces left behind. One Soviet unit, cut off for 23 days, succeeded, after a long march, in rejoining main forces.

Some observers said that if things go badly for the Germans in Russia they may be tempted to try a flanking attack through Turkey.

Recurring reports of joint German and Bulgarian military activity in Bulgaria were supported by one diplomatic observer who said he had seen German Field Marshal Siegmund List in Sofia, the Bulgarian capital, on July 19.

List was in charge of the Balkan campaign from Sofia, but a short time before the outbreak of the Russian war took charge of the southern sector.

Many Nazis Wounded

The same observer said German officers are to be seen everywhere in Bulgaria. Bulgarian hospitals were said to have many German wounded.

Canada-Trained Pilots Will Strike 'Decisive Blow' of War, Says MacDonald

Britain's High Commissioner Describes Dominion's Effort

By Edward T. Folliard
Post Staff Writer

The young men who will strike the "decisive" blow against Germany are the pilots, observers and gunners now being trained in Canada's great Commonwealth Air Training Plan, Malcolm MacDonald, the United Kingdom's high commissioner to Canada, predicted yesterday at a press conference in the British Embassy.

High Commissioner MacDonald, who is the son of the late Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald, came here to confer with Lord Halifax, following a three-month tour of Canada that took him from the Atlantic to the Pacific and back again.

At his press conference, held in the ballroom of the embassy, MacDonald sought to explode the idea held by some persons in the United States that Canada is making only a half-hearted war effort.

Effort Greater Than 1918

With 100,000 Canadian troops in Britain and 2,000,000 serving at home, with the Canadian royal navy fighting the Battle of the Atlantic and units of the Canadian Royal Air Force fighting the Battle of Britain, MacDonald said, America's neighbor to the north is making an even greater war effort than she did in 1914-18.

But clearly what fascinated MacDonald as he toured Canada was the great hatchery for war birds—the Commonwealth Air Training Plan, an empire project in which Canadians, Britons, Australians and New Zealanders are being trained, not to mention Americans, Norwegians and others.

MacDonald said he could not disclose how many trained airmen are being turned out, but he said the number was twice greater than early estimates and was "enormous." Early in the war, there was talk of training 25,000 airmen a year in Canada, so that the number may now have soared to 50,000 a year.

"These are the men who are going to strike the decisive blow," MacDonald said. "They are the men who are going to bomb Germany into surrender."

Bombing Decisive

Did he believe, the high commissioner was asked, that the war could be won solely in the air?

"We shall win this war by a combination of all sorts of arms," he replied. "Right now the important thing is to win the Battle of the Atlantic, for if we lose that there is no use in training these fellows at all.

"But it does seem to me personally that the decisive factor is going to be the bombing of Germany. It may be necessary to follow that up. But that is the blow that is likely to make Germany crack. The objective will be to smash Germany's capacity to make war and to shatter German morale. After all, those people were told that they wouldn't be bombed. The German morale, I would say, is more brittle than ours."

One thing was certain, MacDonald said, and that was that no matter how many war planes were sent overseas by the United States, Britain would have plenty of trained airmen to fly them.

At the outset, Commissioner MacDonald said he wanted to have "a bit of a talk" to dispel some misconceptions in the United States about Canada's war effort. The first misconception, he said, was that Canada did not have conscription. It was not true, he said, that Canada trained her draftees for 30 days and then allowed them to go home. Actually, he said, they were trained for four months, held for the duration of the war, and assigned to posts in Canada so that the regulars (volunteers) would be free to serve overseas.

Canada, he said, was getting all the volunteers she needed for overseas service. In the last campaign for recruits, he said, the number of men who volunteered was one and a half times the number asked for. In Quebec, the French-Canadian province that caused some trouble in the World War, the number of volunteers was 122 per cent of the quota.

MacDonald, said that, aside from the 200,000 conscripts in the home defense service, Canada has 300,000 men on active duty with the army, navy and air force. Translated into terms of the United States' population, he said, this was the equivalent of a force of 3,000,000 men. A large number of conscripts, he said, are always volunteering for overseas service.

Canada, the high commissioner said, is devoting 40 per cent of her national income to her effort to beat Hitler. The idea that Canada is asking Britain to pay for supplies with "cash on the barrel head," he said, is a myth.

Of the 40 per cent of the national income used to prosecute the war, he said, 16 per cent ($1,150,000,000 this year) is being used to pay for supplies for Britain's own use. Canada, he said, has told Britain not to worry about that money.

Support From Quebec

"It is true," he said, "that the equivalent of that money is being built up in sterling balances in Britain. But that is a matter for settlement after the war. Nobody in Canada or Britain is worrying about it now."

MacDonald was asked about reports that the French-Canadians in Quebec Province were not very enthusiastic about the war effort. In an emphatic tone, he said this was not true. He said Cardinal Villeneuve, Archbishop of Quebec and primate of Canada, had made many speeches in which he declared that the issues of this war were of greatest importance to Roman Catholics.

"I was in Quebec a fortnight ago," MacDonald said, "and I fond that the people there are as eager to play their part in the war as the people in any other part of Canada."

The only complaint he had found in any part of Canada, the high commissioner said, was one based on disappointment that the Canadian troops, who covered themselves with glory in the World War, had not yet seen any real action in this war.

British Relax as Russians Take Brunt of Nazi Blows

By Robert P. Post
Copyright by New York Times

London, Aug. 3.—A curious lull which has come over the war, so far as the British are concerned, in the last two weeks almost demands an interim report on the war as the British see it at the moment.

There is a curious attitude—and perhaps a dangerous attitude—which has developed since the Russians really began to hold up the German drive. This is not to say that the British are becoming lethargic but it is to say that a lull has settled down on Britain and the British, confused, are apt to take the war a little less seriously than they took it in those black days of August, 1940. There is every reason in the world why the British should not relax.

At present the war situation has six aspects which can be summed up by areas as follows: Russia, Germany, the occupied countries, Japan, the United States and Britain. It is possible to sum up the situation as seen from here as follows:

1. Russia. At the moment Russian resistance to Germany is one of the most important factors in the situation. It should be emphasized that even the highest authorities in Great Britain have not got much data on which to draw conclusions but it would appear that the Russians have put up a better fight against the Germans than anybody here expected they would show.

Like Punching a Pillow

It is true the German blitzkrieg initially captured miles of Russian territory but fighting Russia is like punching a pillow; you can sink your fist in but what harm do you do to the pillow?

It is generally agreed here that Hitler's object is to destroy the Russian Army. He has not yet succeeded or come anywhere near it. Instead he is being subjected to counterattacks on a large scale and has had to dig in in defense of what he has captured. At least that is what the Russians say. And all the time Hitler is becoming more involved in the Russian war, consequently, less ready to attack anybody else.

2. Germany. Germany has been getting the heaviest kind of a pasting lately. Coincidental with it have been reverses in Russia stalling the German military machine (the principle that there are no watertight compartments in this war is illustrated here.) The question remains to be seen as to how much actual effect the present lull, which must be judged as unfavorable to Germany, has had on the German people.

The Russians claim it has had a big effect and tell of German desertions, and of shootings behind the lines. But it should be remembered that the Russians probably have even a more effective propaganda organization than that of the Germans.

Nevertheless, it is true that the British are daily pounding away at Germany—the country which Air Marshal Goering boasted not a single enemy plane could bomb. The Royal Air Force has inflicted extensive damage on Germany and there is every reason to believe it will inflict more in the next few months.

3. There is the case of the occupied countries. The occupied countries have been subjected to an intensive propaganda campaign backed up by the sight of British planes and the sound of British bombs. Already there appear to be reprecussions if reports reaching here can be believed.

All Are Restless.

It is said Norway is in revolt and that the Germans have had to put in most stringent laws to crush that revolt. Holland is also a problem for the Germans and just so far as the people throughout Europe are beginning to realize that the Germans are suffering reverses, just so far are they ready to move restlessly, if hopelessly, under the Nazi heel. And this statement applies, perhaps, as equally to such semi-independent states as Italy, Spain and even Vichy France.

4. There is the Japan front. There is no question in the British view that Japan's move was not only inspired by Germany, but actually encouraged by Germany and that Germany forced Vichy to accept it. It is, of course, a threat to the British. But whether on the immediate front Japan's action constitues a direct threat to the British war effort remains to be seen.

Japan already has been warned by the United States and Britain that this move brings down all the force of economic warfare on her head; leaving out Thailand it would appear that the British are ready to fight Japan if she tries anything further south. Of course, she may move north. But it is fair to say that the British do not expect that she will.

5—The United States—the United States, in the British view, is providing more assistance. Lease-lend Administrator Harry L. Hopkins has told the British they do not fight alone. The United States has taken over the defense of Iceland. The United States is moving ever closer to actual war, it is thought here, and meanwhile, it is providing the sinews of war in ever greater frequency.

It is notable that big bombers—Britain's most urgent need—are now coming from the United States and are now being used against Germany. It is also notable that Hopkins arrived here tonight from Moscow after a long conversation with Premier Josef Stalin (the futility of watertight compartments again).

Invasion Fear Discounted

Finally there is the home front. There seems little chance of an invasion soon despite Prime Minister Churchill's warning and his use of the September date. An invasion is always a possibility and September 1 would be a good time but the consensus here is that it will not come this year unless Germany can clean up Russia quicker than she has given indication of doing on the basis of present information. Churchill's warning of an invasion is taken here more as a warning to the British that they cannot become complacenent, than anything else.

At any rate, it is fair to record that at the moment, at least, the situation looks better from he British point of view than it has for many months. But there are many "ifs." They include Russian resistance, United States perseverance, and maintenance of the same tenacious effort the British have so far shown. At the moment and from London there is no reason to believe there will be any faltering in any of these vital factors in this

Turks Believe Reds May Hold Till Next Spring

Ankara, Aug. 2 (Delayed) (U.P.)—Turkish military observers, who were convinced that the Germans would score a quick victory over the Russians when the war started six weeks ago, admitted tonight the possibility that the Soviet soldiers would hold out until next spring.

However, they still feel certain that the German war machine eventually will win.

Well-informed military quarters believe the Germans are likely to launch one more desperate attack on the eastern front, possibly beginning the week of August 3. If this is not successful in breaking Soviet resistance, they said, German propaganda will begin explaining that Berlin never expected Russia to be defeated quickly and that the final showdown would take place next spring.

Wickard Tells Norwegians of U. S. Sympathy

By Hallett Abend
Copyright by New York Times

In celebration of the 69th anniversary of the birth of King Haakon the Secretary of Agriculture, Claude R. Wickard, made a short-wave broadcast last night direct to the people of Norway from Station WRUL at Boston and pledged to them the sympathy and help of the people of the United States.

[The Norwegian Legation noted in its announcement of the address that it was made "coincident with widespread outbreaks of violence and unrest in Norway" against the Nazi occupying forces. — Editor's Note.]

"Food is strength, and our objective is food for all defenders of freedom," declared Wickard, after recalling that hundreds of thousands of Norwegians have settled in this country during the last half century, and have played a leading part in developing the farming districts of the Middle West.

Praises Resistance

"American food is already strengthening the resistance of those who have repulsed the attacks of Hitler," Wickard continued. "Part of the American Navy is now located in Iceland to make sure the Atlantic sea lanes stay open, to help make certain that the production of American factories and American farmers will get through."

Secretary Wickard voiced for the American people the great admiration for the effective resistance which the people of Norway continue to put up against Nazi domination. "In America," he declared, "we are threatened by the same forces which have already invaded your country, and attempted to bring you to your knees."

In answer to the Nazi threat, Wickard declared, our farmers and our factory workers are engaged in the greatest preparedness effort of all time. "Airplanes, tanks and guns made in American factories are being used every hour of the day and night to destroy Nazi ammunition dumps, factories and war camps."

Working for Freedom

The Secretary of Agriculture assured his Norwegian listeners that the American farmers and the American people, many of them of Norwegian ancestry, are working with the people of Norway for ultimate freedom.

"We are with you in spirit as you carry on in the great tradition of a free people," he concluded. "With you, we are keeping alive the faith that truth, honor and liberty shall not vanish from the earth. Your battle is an inspiration to us, and to free people all over the world."

Rail Labor Leader Accuses Roads of Misusing Capital

Denver, Aug. 3 (AP).—President D. B. Robertson of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen accused railroad management tonight of misusing the capital entrusted to it.

In a broadcast over the N. B. C.-Red network Robertson appealed to the public to "examine closely the plea of the carriers that they cannot afford to pay the 30 per cent wage increase demand of organized labor" and said railroad employes "question the right of invested capital to insist upon a full participation in earnings when we consider that labor is already inadequately paid.

"We do not intend to pull railway management out of the hole by foregoing wage increases so that it can cover up its own shortcomings by paying off invested capital with a portion of labor's rightful share," Robertson asserted.

Peace Groups Urge That Roosevelt Act to End War

A group of peace organizations announced yesterday that they had begun national circulation of a petition to President Roosevelt urging him to use his influence "for the cessation of hostilities and the achievement of a just peace."

The petition said that "if the U. S. A., as a non-belligerent possessed of vigorous, loyal people, is strong enough to aid in winning wars, it has sufficient influence and ingenuity to aid in ending them."

The citizens peace petition committee, under the chairmanship of Dr. John Haynes Holmes, New York clergyman, is directing the circulation of the petition. The announcement said that the sponsoring organizations are the Fellowship of Reconciliation, the Keep America Out of War Congress, the National Council for the Prevention of War and the Women's International League for Peace and Freedom.

Sidelights of the War

Reds Tell How Nazi Bombers Were Attacked by Own Escort

By the Associated Press

Moscow, Aug. 3.—A Russian communique told today a story of aerial treachery in which a German Messerschmitt was said to have turned on the Heinkel bombers it was escorting, shooting down one while Russian fighters brought down three others.

The communique said the Messerschmitt and Heinkels were approaching city "M" when two Russian fighters on patrol above the clouds saw the Messerschmitt attack.

When the battle was over, the communique added, the pilot of the Messerschmitt, identified as Lieut. Eduard Kromm, accompanied the Russian fighters to their airdrome and delivered his plane to the Red army, saying that four fliers of his unit had been executed for anti-Fascist utterances.

Lorelei Strategy

By the Associated Press

Berlin, Aug. 3.—Sad Russian folk songs broadcast by German loudspeakers are luring bands of Soviet guerrilla warriors out of the forests to surrender, a German propaganda company dispatch from the front said today.

Small groups of Red soldiers lurk in the woods to ambush supply columns and attempt to destroy German rear communications. Nazi infantrymen generally are too busy to devote time to running them down, the dispatch said.

Therefore loudspeakers are hooked up, it went on, and Russian-speaking Germans call into the woods:

"Your troops are defeated. Throw away your weapons. We will treat you well. We will give you food and drink."

Then songs echo through the forests; the announcement is read again and the Russians move from the trees, it was said.

'News' for the Germans

New York, Aug. 3 (AP).—The Moscow radio said today a four-page tabloid German-language newspaper, issued by the Red Army and describing German losses as more than 1,500,000 in the first month of the war, is being dropped by Soviet planes on Nazi positions.

The paper has given German tank losses as about 5,000 and plane losses about the same.

The radio, heard here by C. B. S., said the paper was liberally illustrated to persuade German soldiers to abandon Hitler and come over to the Soviets lest they perish.

350 Fort Knox Prisoners Riot; Guard Kills 1

By the Associated Press

Fort Knox, Ky., Aug. 3.—Col. N. Butler Briscoe, post commander, disclosed today that a soldier had been wounded fatally during a guardhouse riot here Wednesday night and that guards were forced to turn a fire hose on 350 milling prisoners after several rifle shots fired over their heads failed to restore order.

The victim was Private Carl B. McClellan, 19, of Bicknell, Ind. He was struck in the left shoulder by a ricochetting bullet fired by one of the guards, Col. Briscoe said. He died in the post hospital Thursday afternoon.

The rioting was touched off when a prisoner, using a makeshift ladder, climbed over two wire fences surrounding the guardhouse and escaped, Col. Briscoe said. Guards discovered the soldier escaping and fired several shots at him but he made a getaway. He was captured Thursday.

At the sound of the shots, prisoners rushed out of their barracks into the yard, the Colonel reported. They threw rocks from the yard rock pile at guards and officers.

Four of the guards began firing over the heads of the prisoners, and one of the shots glanced off a pillar, striking McClellan who was serving a short term for a minor offense, the officer said.

When the shots failed to disperse the rioters, a fire hose was brought into action and order was restored.

Col. Briscoe said Ballistic tests will be made on the guards' rifles to determine which fired the fatal shot. The man responsible will be tried on a manslaughter charge by a military court, he said.

110th Leaves for Range Fire Training at Indiantown Gap

By the Associated Press

Fort George G. Meade, Md., Aug. 3.—With full field equipment, the 110th Field Artillery, a former Maryland National Guard unit, left camp today for two weeks of intensive training at Indiantown Gap, Pa.

Under command of Col. Henry C. Evans, the soldiers left Meade in 11 march units at four-minute intervals. With them rolled 24 75-millimeter guns and seven half-ton weapon carriers.

The 1,000 officers and men will bivouac in pup tents in the field near their guns, spending the two weeks in firing on the big Pennsylvania range.

In September, the 110th will go to A. P. Hill Military Reservation in Caroline County, Va., for three weeks of maneuvering before heading to North Carolina for large-scale corps and Army maneuvers.

Hull Back on Job Today After Month's Absence

Secretary of State Hull returned to the Capital last night and planned to be back on the job at the State Department at 9 o'clock this morning after an absence of more than a month.

He has been at White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., to recover from a mild illness and to obtain a complete rest at his physician's direction.

Farm Income Increases 591 Million in Half Year

The Agriculture Department reported yesterday that income from farm marketings during the first half of the year totaled $4,005,000,000, or 591 million dollars more than the same period of 1940. The general level of prices received by farmers, the report also said, may average nearly 20 per cent higher this year than last.

First Lady's Next Role Is Radio Commentator

New York, Aug. 3 (AP).—Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt will be featured in the role of current events commentator in a series of broadcasts beginning Sunday, Sept. 28, her sponsor, the Pan-American Coffee Bureau, announced today.

The weekly program (5:45 p. m., Easter nstandard time), will be carried by 122 stations of the N. B. C. Blue Network.

In Atlanta, the Georgia Retail Petroleum Dealers' Association distributed cards bearing Ickes' photo and worded: "Sure, Secretary Ickes, we'll cooperate."

Cannon Requests WPA Hire More Men of 45 to 65

Requests that more persons between 45 and 65 be given jobs on Federal projects and that the WPA cease operation in defense construction were made yesterday by Representative Cannon (Democrat), of Florida.

Cannon said he would introduce a resolution asking—but not directing—that the WPA cease defense work. In a statement, Cannon said that "under the present system the WPA is devoting a large part of its funds to defense construction projects, giving such projects preference and cutting out products in the areas which need WPA most."

Senator Hayden (Democrat), of Arizona, recently requested the Federal Works Administration to give more consideration to workers of 45 to 65 years, and John Carmody, FWA Administrator, advised him yesterday that his appeal had been sent to all contractors engaged in FWA work and to constituent agencies of the Works Administration.

action, and that within a few days it would subside. It would take three days to a week before comprehensive figures could be obtained, they said.

Rationing Predicted

Some observers, however, expressed the belief that the ban would stimulate sales; that full tanks would stimulate motoring. They predicted that gasoline rationing would follow the curfew, urged by Secretary Ickes to relieve the fuel transportation shortage in the East.

There is plenty of gasoline to be had from America's oilfields, but there is a lack of oil tankers resulting from the diversion of 150 such tankers to Britain.

Ickes himself has stated that the voluntary ban was ordered to bring the American people face to face with the critical situation. Defense officials have forecast that the strategy of psychology may be followed by gas rationing after Labor Day.

Police Help 4 Drivers

Washington police, who had received special orders to be "as helpful as the circumstances permit," obtained fuel for four stranded motorists, but turned down more than a dozen requests for assistance because they felt the grounds weren't justified.

The gas was obtained for a District man who wanted to get to Lynchburg, where his brother had been injured in an automobile accident; for a soldier who had to report to camp; for a Pennsylvanian who just had to get home in a hurry; and a reporter who had made a special trip into Maryland.

As for the motorists who were forced to "park" illegally because they ran out of gas—well, they'll have to talk it over with the precinct captain and depend on his mercy.

Police towed off no autos, but the A. A. A. reported it had to send towing service to three of its members in the District. Some filling stations remained open to give service other than gas and oil; others were forced to keep open because they had no locks for the pumps.

Baltimore Rushes Tanks To Offset Shortage

Baltimore, Aug. 3 (AP).—Erection of oil storage tanks at water-front terminals is being rushed to bring the port of Baltimore's capacity to a record high in an effort to make storage space for petroleum reserves to offset any severe effects of increasing tanker shortage.

Nearly every refinery and tank farm is erecting new steel reservoirs. The major construction program is in east Baltimore but many tanks are going up at Curtis Bay and in Fairfield and lower Canton.

Facilities are being provided especially for kerosene storage due to the introduction of kerosene for use in gravity-type oil-burning furnaces, space heaters and rural power units. In the new Armistead Gardens defense housing project, the 700 two-story houses are heated completely by kerosene-burning space heaters.

Bomber Crash Kills Two Canadian Pilots

Montreal, Aug. 3 (AP).—Captain Alfred J. Williams, of Winnipeg, pilot and radio operator Frank G. Godfrey of Glencoe, Ont., were killed today in the crash of a Hudson bomber near the Moncton, N. B. airport, it was announced tonight by the Atlantic Ferry Organization.

Filling Stations Stay Lighted, But Won't Sell Gas After 7

The sight of certain filling stations lighted up as usual prompted indignant passersby to call The Post to report violations of the 7 p. m. curfew.

Investigation usually disclosed that no gasoline was being sold, although the station was offering its other services as usual—which is within the spirit of the regulation.

One motorist saw a sign on a filling station that said "open all night," so he drove in.

"Can I get some gas?" he asked.

"Nope. We're shut down," the attendant replied.

"Well, can I get some water for my radiator?"

"Nope. Water's shut off."

"What are you doing here then?"

"Have to stay. Got no locks for the pumps."

Lieutenant Refuses Gasoline to General

East Weymouth, Mass., Aug. 3 (AP).—A car drove up to Lawrence Schofield's gasoline station a minute after 7 o'clock tonight.

Schofield, a lieutenant in the Army Reserve, recognized the driver and said:

"I'm sorry, sir, but it's after 7 o'clock. No gas."

The man went across the street and 'phoned his brother in nearby Hingham to lend him enough gasoline to reach Boston.

The driver of the car was Gen. Charles H. Cole, Yankee division veteran and chairman of the Massachusetts labor board.

Soldier and Girl Found Hanged in Hotel

Little Rock, Ark., Aug. 3 (U.P.).—The bodies of Pvt. Kenneth B. Schroder, 22, of Hooper, Neb., and Virginia Schneider, 22, of Fremont, Neb., were found hanging from a pipe in a downtown hotel tonight.

The bodies apparently had been in that position about 24 hours, police said Schroder was a member of Company B, 110th Quartermaster Regiment, the outfit that recently disciplined by Lieut.-Gen. Ben Lear with Nation-wide repercussions.

Automobiles Parade Before Open Stations

Six men in two flag-bedecked automobiles drove up, according to the United Press, to an open filling station in Mineola, Long Island, and began parading up and down in front of the station. They said they were employes of stations which had obeyed the curfew request. They dispersed at the order of a policeman but repeated their act at a station in New Hyde Park. Police also ended this demonstration.

Station Owner Pays $15 to Obey Curfew

The curfew proved costly for A. B. Cook, who has operated a Richmond (Va.) station for more than 12 years without once closing his shop. He was forced to spend $15 to buy locks in order to close his station at 7 o'clock last night.

"I didn't have a lock or key on the place," Cook said, as he rolled in his "Open All Night" signs.

15 Autoists Stranded In Connecticut

In Connecticut, the curfew caught 15 motorists with empty fuel tanks on the Merritt Parkway, the State's superhighway, and State police said they were just "out of luck."

Some of the stranded ones tried hitching rides from passing cars, others sought to borrow gasoline. The rest stayed in their vehicles overnight.

'Gasoline Gus' Sheds Humor in Blackout

Pittsburgh, Aug. 3 (AP).—The 7 p. m. to 7 a. m. nightly gasoline station "blackout" which started tonight drew an "editorial comment" from a service station operator in suburban Edgewood who posted a huge blackboard outside his establishment reading:

"Gasoline Gus says—They say that all the gasoline stations will be closed after 7 p. m. GOSH—How we hate Hitler."

Vote Due Today On Joint Returns

the joint return provision is the only change on which the House will be permitted to vote, unless the Ways and Means Committee itself should agree to other changes, considered a most unlikely step.

Charging that this procedure rule "has made it impossible to get in the House any real public expression on the various provisions of the bill," Murray told the C. I. O. forces to "raise this matter with your Senators, since the next opportunity for a careful examination of the bill will come in the Senate Finance Committee and on the Senate floor."

The C. I. O. leader's statement, accompanying an analysis of the revenue measure by the C. I. O. Economic Division, followed an exchange of correspondence between President Roosevelt and Representative Robert L. Doughton, Ways and Means chairman, in which the latter said he was "greatly surprised" at the President's late suggestions, and made it clear that the committee would not make the requested changes.

Against Fewer Exemptions

The C. I. O. analysis took issue with the President on the suggestion for lowering income tax exemptions below the present $2,000 for married couples and $800 for single persons. It held to be a "substantial victory" the retention of the present exemptions in the committee's bill, though the C. I. O. had previously urged return to the former exemptions of $2,500 and $1,000.

The labor group's analysis asked that Congress put stiffer levies on the transfer of fortunes, to prevent their being passed on from generation to generation, thereby, it said, placing enormous social controls in the hands of "persons without public or private responsibility." The memorandum said the committee bill also retains the so-called normal profits formula, "a device which has allowed many very high-profit corporations to escape effective taxation."

"The committee has still failed to plug the loophole pointed out by the C. I. O. for the taxation of undivided business profits," the memorandum added. "This has become especially serious in the current period when corporations are trying to hide their fantastic profits in various kinds of contingency reserves, some of them in excess tax reserves, others just plain undefined reserve for, as one company put it, 'unforeseeable emergencies.'"

Instead of improving the sales and excise taxes which particularly affect the lower income groups, the memorandum asserted the bill had actually increased such taxes.

"As a matter of fact it adds a number of new taxes which will bear upon working people, such as the $5 tax on every automobile, taxes on tires and tubes, matches, soft drinks and such."

"There has been open warning by the chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee that next year's bill will probably contain a general sales tax," the memorandum said. "This will mean that labor's fight to establish a sound Federal tax program is just beginning."

gency Hospital and discharged after treatment.

Although guards attempt to discourage the practice of walking to the top of the monument, figures show it is a popular sport, particularly among visitors to Washington. Munch was one of nearly 3,000 persons who hiked to the top yesterday despite the sizzling heat.

Montgomery County police at Bethesda, Md., said the Gilbert youngster was first reported missing. A search of the cannal was begun and the body was found 50 feet from where the child was last seen, by Marvin Mrstick, of Brookmont, who was diving for the body.

The party with whom the child had gone picknicking included Fred G. Stewart, 501 Seward Square Southeast, a scoutmaster; Mr. and Mrs. Allen Poe, 614 Pennsylvania Avenue Southeast; Buddy Mister, 4; Edgar Allen Poe, 8, and Harvey Gilbert, 4.

Dr. C. E. Hawks, Montgomery Council medical examiner, pronounced the boy dead and issued a certificate of accidental drowning.

In other traffic accidents in and near Washington yesterday two persons were hurt. Darfus Mallory, Negro, 37, of 1223½ Fourth Street, Northwest, was treated at Casualty Hospital for a possible fractured neck suffered in an accident at River Road and the District line. Arthur H. Davis, 24, of 2216 Thirty-eighth Street, Northwest, suffered cuts on the head when thrown from his motorcycle in a collision with an automobile in the 4000 block of Nicholas Avenue, Southwest.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry L. Brittingham, of 3410 Rodman Street Northwest, were injured in a collision between their automobile and an Army truck several miles south of Dover, Del., the Associated Press reported. Mr. Brittingham, 52, was treated in Kent General Hospital, Dover, for a leg fracture, while Mrs. Brittingham, 52, was treated there for a hip fracture. Miss Elizabeth Wilson, 23, of Baltimore, woh was riding with the Washington couple, was treated for cuts and shock.

Japan's Press Hints at Move On Thailand

By the United Press

Tokyo, Aug. 3.—Japan moved ahead today with its expansion program for a "new order" in the South Pacific and the press, filled with caustic criticism of the United States and Britain, hinted that the next major move might be against Thailand.

(In Shanghai, the Japanese army organ, Sin Shun Pao, stated that after settlement of the French Indo-China question Japan will use a "political blitzkrieg to crystallize the clouds looming over Thailand" and warned the United States to consider seriously the Japanese navy "which is ready to remove obstacles preventing establishment of the new order.")

On the surface, reaction to the United States' oil embargo against Japan appeared to be mild. Newspapers refrained from assailing the United States on this point and unanimously declared that Japan had not been surprised by the move and was prepared to meet the situation.

The greatest mobilization of military strength in Japanese history was being speeded up as additional contingents of men and equipment moved into Indo-China, many of them assigned to garrisons in Cambodia along Thai's frontier.

The Japanese Domei news agency said in a dispatch from Bangkok that action, similar to the occupation of French Indo-China, might be taken in Thailand.

Japan's great mobilization of manpower created a labor shortage and the education ministry announced that all students of middle school age upward would be organized immediately into national service corps for collective labor and, incidentally, military training.

The navy ministry decreed that retired naval officers and non-commissioned personnel might re-enlist to meet the "super-crisis."

Food Lacking; Avoid Helsinki, Finns Warned

Copyright by New York Times

Helsinki, Aug. 3.—Leading newspapers today appeal to the citizens of Helsinki who left the capital during the evacuation to prolong their stay in the county because the food supply is severely hampered by traffic difficulties.

This appeal is printed alongside a cablegram informing Finland of the official British blockade and that Finland is now considered a "hostile" nation.

The minister of public welfare states that everyone who unnecessarily returns to the capital should go back to the country and assist in the harvest.

With some uneasiness, the population is preparing to meet the coming of winter. Provisions are small and food has been scarce for a long time. Even though rationing has secured for the population enough food to sustain life, several important nourishments have been and still are lacking. Meat is almost unobtainable, butter very rare and imported foodstuffs are simply lacking.

During the summer rather ample supplies of vegetables helped to offset other shortages, but this week's extremely hot weather, together with the lack of variety in food, has caused lots of digestive trouble.

Almost every other citizen of Helsinki is complaining of a bad stomach. Maybe it cannot be said that the population behind the front has had its health directly weakened, but it is a fact that the year-long privation of important foodstuffs has left its mark.

The impossibility of making any variation in the daily diet also influences the spirit of the people.

Plot to Blast Arms Plants Disclosed

paper reports that troops had been rushed to the danger zones, Hoover's article says.

"It is now possible," he writes, "to tell the real story behind the headlines in the newspapers across the country last May: 'Troops Rush to Airplane Factories'—'Soldiers Guarding Ammunition Factories.'

Planned Mass Attack

"The reports were accurate. They caused considerable speculation. Three weeks earlier, startling information from reliable sources had reached the FBI that organized saboteurs were planning a mass attack upon vital defense industries during the long Decoration Day weekend.

"Two general plans were to be followed. First, certain individuals were to be inside the factories to stop production bloodlessly, taking advantage of the holiday absence of many employes. If this failed, saboteurs in private planes would destroy the factories by bombing.

"Airplane and ammunition factories were to be the principal targets. On May 27, three days before the holiday, the FBI confirmed the reports from foreign sources. The information was transmitted instantly to all field offices, to military and naval intelligence services, to the Treasury Department, to local law-enforcement agencies and to the factories marked for destruction.

Precautions In Time

"Precautionary measures were immediately taken to meet any eventuality. Word reached the newspapers and headlines shortly were blazoning a warning that America's defense industries were ringed with steel.

"And nothing happened. Here, national alertness and widespread publicity may have circumvented a disastrous outbreak of sabotage."

In his article, which enumerates many new tricks of spies and saboteurs, Mr. Hoover warns that "modern warfare does not limit itself to battlefields; it can be fought just as effectively in factories, on farms, in schools and even in homes. In this war the spy and saboteur, working hand in glove, are as important to their country's armies as are the generals themselves."

Baering Down On the News

By Arthur (Bugs) Baer

I don't understand why food should get expensive just because we have a million men in the Army.

Those men ate before they went into the Army, didn't they? And they certainly have more competition now than they did at home. Of course their appetites are better, the portions bigger and the tips smaller.

But a million men in the Army and a million men at home are still a million men. That's logic that doesn't make sense.

Dear Mr. O'Donnell:

After our conversation last Monday concerning the prospects of securing air conditioning salesmen through the use of the classified columns of the Washington Post, I believe you will be interested in the results obtained thus far from the advertisement.

Yesterday (the first day the advertisement ran in your paper) we had six direct inquiries from it, and up to eleven o'clock this morning we have had four other inquiries. In the face of an acknowledged lack of salesmen looking for positions in Washington at this time, we believe this to be a good response.

I might tell you, too, that the response from the Post advertising of this Male Help Wanted item has far surpassed that we received from another leading Washington paper when the identical copy was carried in it.

Very truly,

American Downs Big Nazi Bomber

'Baby' of Eagle Squadron Describes Defeat of Dornier Over Channel

Copyright by New York Tribune, Inc.

London, Aug. 3.—Pilot Officer Gregory Daymond, of Los Angeles, 20-year-old American flying with the Eagle Squadron of the Royal Air Force and the "baby" of the American unit, today became the unchallenged high scoring American pilot in the war when he shot down his third Nazi plane, a Dornier 17 bomber. It was the first bomber and sixth enemy aircraft definitely destroyed by the squadron.

Flying with a second Eagle squadron member on convoy escort, he was over the Channel flying near the ships when he saw a stick of bombs explode in the water side of the vessels. Daymond's comrade stayed below to guard the convoy while the young Los Angeles flier shot his Spitfire plane into the clouds to look for the bomber.

At several thousand feet in the air Daymond looked below and sighted the Dornier, already heading toward the Continental coast. As quoted by a superior officer, Daymond said:

"I gave him a burst and a really stern chase started immediately as the German dived away to within 50 feet sea level at full throttle," said Daymond afterwards. "I opened fire 200 yards range, dead astern. That Dornier was going all out and we weer traveling at nearly 300 miles an hour. I could see my bullets hitting the water so I put my nose up a bit and raised my aim.

"Up to this time the rear gunner had been returning my fire but was very wide of the mark and now he stopped altogether.

"Suddenly smoke began to pour from the Dornier and it struck the water. It immediately bounced 50 feet in the air and went in nose first. Only a small patch of oil was left on the sea."

Daymond, who will be 21 on November 23, has been praised by W. E. J. Taylor, the Eagle squadron's former leader, as one of the best natural fliers he ever saw.

A former partner in a New York travel agency, Taylor came to England just before the war opened and led the squadron from its formation last winter but just left the R. A. F. to return to the United States naval air force. Daymond himself gave this explanation of how he happened to be flying with the R. A. F.:

"I was standing in Hollywood last July 20 when I suddenly decided I ought to come over here. That's all there is to it. I've been flying ever since 1936 when I was just a kid with a travelair."

Daymond bagged his first Nazi plane July 2 when the Eagle Squadron took part in its first major flight. Four days later he downed another.

Greek Airmen in Palestine Blessed in New War on Axis

Copyright by New York Times

Jerusalem, Aug. 2 (Delayed).—Several hundred Greek airmen who had managed to escape from their homeland to Palestine in order to carry on the fight against the Axis, stood bareheaded this afternoon at a camp near here and received the blessing of Jerusalem's Greek Orthodox patriarch, Timotheos.

The prelate exhorted the men to summon up the old Spartan spirit and enjoined them not to ask how numerous were the enemy, but only "Where is the enemy?" and proceed to destroy them, whom he described as a "greater menace to civilization than the Goths" of ancient time.

Instruments of revenge, consisting of a number of planes of various types furnished to the Hellenic air force by the Royal Air Force, stood by on the desert sand in readiness.

Greeks are constantly arriving in Palestine in order to join the national forces. Most of them make their way here in small fishing boats, sailing at night and putting into secluded harbors during the day. The Greek consul-general at Jerusalem, Dimetrios Papas, said that in many cases the men were accompanied by their womenfolk and children, home conditions being no longer tolerable.

How to settle and finance these refugees has created a serious problem. Recently boatloads of children arrived, all of them on the verge of starvation. They described conditions particularly in Thrace and the Dodecanese Islands as such that the Greek inhabitants "are not supposed to live," as one put it.

Prince Peter, a cousin of Hellene's King, and his wife, Princess Irene, and Admiral Alexander Sekalariou, the Greek fleet's chief, and the government's vice president, were among the prominent Greeks who took part in the simple ceremonies which were officially described as commemorating the "revival of the Royal Hellenic Air Force."

Palestine government officials, representatives of the British and the Australian armies and the Royal Air Force were also present and witnessed an exhibition of stunt flying by two Greek aces.

R. A. F. Blasts Bases Lost To Nazis in Crete Battle

Copyright by New York Times

Cairo, Aug. 3.—Royal Air Force planes have ranged over the Mediterranean for the last two days bombing Axis-controlled islands and searching out and attacking Axis war planes.

Effective raids were carried out against the islands of Crete, Lampedusa and Sicily, which resulted in heavy damage to merchant vessels. The bombers started numerous fires.

R. A. F. bombers attacked Axis shipping at the fortified island of Lampedusa which lies between Tunis and Sicily. Several bombs were dropped squarely on two merchantment of about 3,000 tons. Wreckage was sent flying high into the air. Meanwhile the raiders attacked and silenced machine-gun posts.

At Creta, both the Candia and the Maleme airdromes were objects of attack. An extensisve red fire indicated that a gasoline dump was hit at Candia while at Maleme bombs brought an answering detonation which sent smoke clouds 5,000 feet into the air, convincing observers that a munitions dump had been hit.

Homeward bound, the raiders had to fly over mountains but they could still see the flames 40 miles away.

One Savoia bomber was destroyed and a large number were badly damaged during a raid on the Borizzo airdrome in Sicily.

British fighters intercepted a large number of junkers dive bombers with a Messerschmitt escort, attacking British naval vessels off the north African coast. In the dog fight which followed, eight planes were shot down with many others damaged, the Germans losing four junkers and one Messerschmitt, the British three fighters.

Italian Cruiser Torpedoed

Copyright by New York Times

London, Aug. 3 (AP)—Sinking of two Axis supply ships of 1,600 and 5,000 tons and the torpedoing of an Italian cruiser and a floating dock by British submarines was reported today by the admiralty.

The admiralty identified the cruiser as either the Eugenio Di Savoia or the Emanuele Filiberto Duca D'Aosta, ships of 7,283 tons built in 1934 and 1935 and armed with eight 6-inch guns. Two torpedoes struck, the communique said, but it was not ascertained whether the vessel went down.

When the attack was made, the admiralty said, the cruiser was sailing along with another 6-inch gun cruiser of the Garibaldi class. Both were screened by destroyers which immediately upon attack began circling and laying down a protective smoke screen.

The floating dock, towed by two tugs and escorted by a destroyer and two torpedo boats, was attacked less than a mile from the Italian coast, the admiralty said, and one torpedo hit it.

Report British Ship Torpedoed

Rome, Aug. 3.—Today's war communique announces that an unspecified British naval unit was torpedoed in the Mediterranean. A torpedo-launching plane, says the Stefani agency, saw some British warships south of Pantelleria late last night. It approached to within a few hundred yards of one of the ships and unleashed a torpedo, which hit on the side, it says.

The communique also states that Italian planes raided Malta yesterday.

Jilted Edith Dahl Wishes Flier Well On His Marriage

Salt Lake City, Aug. 3 (INS).—Although jilted for another woman by the man she saved from a Fascist firing squad in Spain, blonde Edith Rogers Dahl tonight had nothing but "best wishes" for the former Spanish loyalist flier.

Miss Dahl, or Miss Rogers, a showgirl, admitted that her marriage to Dahl in Mexico was illegal, and that therefore he was free legally to marry another.

"I've been holding out on the real facts of our marriage for years in the hope of straightening him out," Miss Dahl explained. "We thought a lot of each other. After the marriage iinn 1936, we sailed for Europe and spent four months in Paris before he went to Spain.

"Since he has now married someone else, I am talking in self-defense," she said.

Montgomery Zone Hearing Scheduled

The Montgomery County Board of Commissioners will hold a hearing at the Bethesda office, Wisconsin Avenue, Thursday at 7:30 p. m. on the application of Edward A. Keys, owner, for rezoning of residential "A" to commercial "D" property.

The land is located in the Battery Park subdivision on the southwest side of Old Georgetown Road and on the east side of Del Ray Avenue. It adjoins property now zoned for commercial purposes.

Report Tells How 4,000 Fled To Palestine

Copyright by New York Times

New York, Aug. 3.—Details of the overland immigration of more than 4,000 European refugees through the Near East which started after entrance of Italy in the war were revealed today here in a report of the Jewish agency for Palestine to the American Jewish joint distribution committee.

The report from Chaim Barlas, immigration director of the Jewish agency, was made public by Joseph C. Hyman, executive vice chairman of the joint distribution committee, with offices here.

Barlas pointed out that entrance of Italy in the war closed the Mediterranean to peaceful shipping and stressed that the removal of the refugees from Europe to Palestine was made possible largely "through the generous assistance" of the joint distribution committee.

Praises Turkish Kindness

Barlas reported that from August, 1940, to April, 1941, more than 3,000 immigrants reached Palestine via Turkey, including 1,686 from Rumania, 1,100 from Kaunas, Lithuania, 273 from Yugoslavia, 90 from Moscow and 250 from Istanbul. About 900 additional immigrants held certificates for Palestine, of whom 300 were in Budapest, 290 in Switzerland, 100 in Rumania and 150 in Yugoslavia and about 100 in Merzina, Turkey.

The "kindly attitude" of the Turkish government was praised in the report and in connection with this it was stated that about 600 additional immigrants reached Palestine via Turkey from April to the middle of June, 1941.

Barlas stated that after straightening out complicated negotiations the Turkish government issued an order stating that "to assist Jews who were being persecuted in the countries of origin, the government has agreed to grant transit visas through Turkey to refugees holding immigration certificates of the Palestine government."

Difficulties in Baltic

Barlas pointed out that unforeseen difficulties arose in getting immigrants out of Kaunas because of the dissolution of the Palestine bureaus in the Baltic countries after they were annexed by Soviet Russia. Transit visas were sent to the Turkish Consul in Moscow, who issued them in accordance with lists furnished to him.

As practically all the emigrants arrived in Istanbul without funds, the joint distribution committee here, the major American organization for rescue, relief and rehabilitation of distressed Jewish populations overseas, sent the necessary funds to finance the migration.

Alexandria Post Prepares to Greet Legion Visitors

Alexandria Post 24, of the American Legion, is completing preparations for an influx of several thousand Legionnaires, auxiliary members and affiliated veterans for the annual State department convention in Alexandria on August 16, 17, 18 and 19, General Chairman F. Clinton Knight said last night. Committees for the conclave have been asked to meet every Monday night at 7:30 in Gadsby's Tavern to complete plans for the 4-day session.

The annual meeting of the Forty and Eight Society will open the convention program on August 16, Knight said, while the general session will get under way the following day. An elaborate program is being prepared for the entertainment of visiting delegates, and several hundred bands and other units are expected to compete for prizes in the annual convention parade on August 18.

A contract for convention decorations has been awarded to the Metropolitan Flag & Awning Co., of Philadelphia. Decorations will be erected along King Street from West to Fairfax Streets, and on the 100 blocks of North and South Royal and Washington Streets.

Young Democratic Units Elect in Va.

Lynchburg, Va., Aug. 3 (AP).—Duval Radford, Bedford attorney, was elected national committeemen for the Young Democratic Clubs of Virginia and J. C. Goodwyn was chosen chairman of the Sixth District Young Democratic Clubs here today. Both of the elections were unanimous.

Radford was selected by the executive committee of the Young Democratic Clubs of Virginia to fill the unexpired term of A. Guy Hope, of Richmond, who resigned when he was called into the United States Navy. Radford's term expires August 30, but the Sixth District convention indorsed him for reelection.

Goodwyn succeeds Stuart Carter, of Fincastle, who presided over the convention. Other Sixth District officers elected are W. T. Baldwin, jr., of Radford; Emmett Powell, of Roanoke, and W. S. Mundy, jr., of Lynchburg, vice presidents; Mrs. Ivan Stoner, of Botetourt County, secretary, and Miss Clara Barricks, of Campbell County, treasurer.

'Union Now' Results in Split Of Speakers on Air Forum

"Union Now" with Great Britain would be "very much like marrying Uncle Sam off to a British widow with six children, all of whom had the measles and a host of unpaid doctor bills," stated Congressman Karl E. Mundt, Republican from South Dakota, last night in a four-man radio debate on Theodore Granik's American Forum of the Air, broadcast to the Nation via station WOL and the Mutual Broadcasting Station.

Also participating in the forum's discussion of whether the United States should form a federal union with the British Commonwealth were Clarence K. Streit, newspaperman and author of "Union Now;" Congressman Stephen A. Day (Republican), of Illinois, and Dr. Frank Kingdon, chairman of the New York Chapter of the Committee to Defend America.

Streit told the audience: "No solution of the world problem facing us could be more American than our proposal to form a Federal Union now with the six democracies of the British Commonwealth—Canada, England, Eire, South Africa, Australia and New Zealand. We will have these seven free-speaking peoples do with Adolf the First as the 13 did with George the Third—meet this great danger and opportunity. Contrast the way we are now meeting that danger and opportunity with that old American way and see if it rings true," he challenged.

"The thirteen colonies proclaimed in their great Declaration that they fought not for America alone, but for the universal principles that 'all men (not just Americans) are created equal.' They rejected the isolationist clamor for 'Pennsylvania first' and 'Connecticut first,'" Streit declared.

Taking the same side was Frank Kingdon, who warned that "if we don't accept federalism, we will have imperialism, militarism or appeasement." The New York chairman of the Committee to Defend America told the audience that "the whole spiritual integrity of the world is threatened, and our involvement is inescapable."

Opposing "Union Now," was Congressman Stephen A. Day, who recently charged Streit's organization as being "un-American" and asked for investigation by the Dies Committee. He is also author of the book, "We Must Save The Republic."

"No American could call his soul his own if we joined with Britain," the Illinois Congressman asserted. "What chance would a plain everyday American have in a British caste society? Would Mrs. Roosevelt be the Duchess of Hyde Park?

"Union Now would split America asunder into groups and factions who, at first heart-broken, would then become sullen. We want no other Union in America than the Union for which we fought and died," he concluded.

In agreement was Republican Mundt, who told the audience, "Union Now would require the scrapping of the Declaration of Independence. To transfer the destiny of the United States out of the New World where it has flowered so brightly back to the Old World whose woes it escaped to form a new nation, I am unalterably opposed."

'Abduction' Case Reported Solved In Prince Georges

What appeared to be an abduction case or worse solved itself yesterday after Prince Georges County (Md.) police were asked to search for an automobile stolen at Oxon Hill "with a woman asleep in the back seat."

Mrs. Mary Sinclair, of Baltimore, reported the alleged theft and told police Mrs. Virginia Raub, 29, of 6618 Sixth Street Northwest, was in the car.

Mrs. Sinclair said she had gone into the Sunnybrook Gardens at Oxxon Hill, leaving Mrs. Raub in the automobile. When she returned to look for the car, Mrs. Sinclair said, it was gone.

After flashing a radio lookout for the car, Prince Georges police began an intensive search, which ended an hour later when the car and Mrs. Raub were located at her home. Mrs. Raub, reached by telephone at her home, declined to comment, except to say she had driven the car back.

"Special Policemen"

In a letter printed on this page today Mr. LeRoy Westbury, president of the United States Special Police Association, accuses The Post of making "a serious error" in an editorial appearing on July 27 under the caption of "Special Policemen." This "error" apparently consists of our reference to special policemen designated by the Metropolitan Police and paid by private companies without specifically drawing a distinction between that group and the special policemen who guard buildings and grounds for the Federal Government. There was no misunderstanding of the facts on our part, as a careful reading of the editorial will indicate. To clear away any possible misinterpretation of the editorial, however, we are glad to say that it in no way refers to the United States Special Police. Incidentally, the present confusion over use of the term "special police" would be eliminated by a bill recently passed by the House and now before a Senate committee. That bill would designate the guards of Federal buildings and grounds in Washington as the United States Building Police. We believe the change is in order, and probably the salary adjustments provided for in the same bill, too.

Run On Silk

No sympathy need be wasted on the women who soon may find their supply of silk stockings reduced to zero by the order freezing silk stocks. They can get along with substitutes. And they can console themselves by remembering that their sacrifices—very minor ones, too—are made in a good cause. The situation is very different, however, when we consider the effect of the OPM decree upon thousands of workers employed in fabricating stockings and other silk fabrics.

One of the major objectives of the defense planning agencies has been to assist the transition from a normal peace time to a preparedness basis, with a minimum amount of disturbance to industry and labor. For example, the protests aroused by the Henderson order to cut automobile production 50 per cent were due chiefly to fears that wide-scale unemployment would result during the period of adjustment. It was felt that a more gradual reduction of output was essential to allow for absorption of men thrown out of work.

In respect of silk, our planners did not allow for the possible cutting off of our supplies of silk from Japan. And the break with Japan has come at a time when our silk stocks are just about equal to minimum Army requirements for a year. That being the case, the order to suspend further processing of raw silk was absolutely necessary. But it is nonetheless tragic, as Donald M. Nelson, OPM's director of purchases, admits, that mills should be forced to suspend and throw thousands of workers out of jobs. One union leader estimates that within three weeks 175,000 men and women will be on the streets.

The obvious thing to do in meeting this grave situation is to adapt facilities for silk manufacture to production of substitute fabrics. That is said to be comparatively easy in case of the hosiery mills. But, unfortunately, a shortage of substitute yarns will complicate the adjustment problem. This situation will be eased somewhat by the OPACS order, setting aside one-tenth of rayon production and yarn stocks for hosiery and silk manufacture.

Certainly the workers who have lost their jobs because we have broken off trading relations with Japan are casualties of the defense program who are deserving of every consideration. Fortunately their distress will be only temporary. And, with the aid of unemployment compensation, most of them, no doubt, will be able to manage for a time, even without such work. But even temporary hardships might have been largely obviated if the Government had been a little more foresighted. It should have taken advance steps to emancipate—at least in the planning stages—American industry from dependence upon a product coming from a country with which our relations have for so long been strained.

Landfall?

Throughout all the conquered lands of Europe the hope of deliverance suddenly and mysteriously burgeoned. Accordingly resistance and rebellion are taking bolder and more open forms. In starving Greece, they say, Italian soldiers are being jeered in public; in Norway Nazi troops have been stoned in the streets; in occupied France people gather in thousands in the public squares to sing the Marseillaise; in Belgium, Yugoslavia, perhaps even in Poland and Bohemia, there are increasing riots; murmurs are heard in Hungary. In the east the supposedly irresistible force of the German war machine may or may not have met at last an immovable body. In the Atlantic the tide of battle seems to be turning. There are tales of bitter quarrels among the Nazi hierarchs. A certain note of desperation seems to be creeping into the German propaganda broadcasts. And in the carefully censored radio scripts of American correspondents in Berlin there seem to be significant innuendoes. Why all this talk of war cemeteries—"of graves, of worms and epitaphs?" Meanwhile in London the bookmakers' odds that the Axis will be beaten before December 31 of this year drop suddenly from one to ten to one to three.

After this long midnight of the world, this fearful tempest, these dark and wrathful seas—do we dare to trust birds of good omen? By how many false portents have we not been deceived already! Is all this another mirage fabricated by the demoniac Dr. Goebbels to lure us into a whirlpool of despair? And if Hitler's star is declining, why has his ally Japan chosen this moment to move? Our best informed and most "realistic" authorities tell us that by no military calculation can Hitler's defeat before 1942 be foreseen. They warn us that if Hitler succeeds in encircling and destroying the Red Army, piecemeal or otherwise, he will catch up with his timetable quickly enough. Perhaps the Russians surprised both the Germans and ourselves merely because we expected them to repeat the strategy of Barclay de Tolly, Bragation, and Kutosov in 1812. They warn us that the fact that the war machine has been stopped does not mean it will never move again.

All this is quite impressive and sobering, but it seems to us that the "realists" have eliminated from their calculations certain factors of vital importance. One trouble with "realism" is its tendency to deal with particulars rather than generalities; that is to say, with facts rather than truths. Yet in matters involving human nature a general truth may be a safer guide than any number of particulars, however accurate. One general truth of which we have been losing sight, as we did toward the end of World War I, is that wars don't last forever. We must not forget that even at best war is an abnormal condition which no people can endure forever. This is even truer of total war. When a great and evil force is loosed in a nation, or in the world, the effect is like that of a stone dropped into a pond. The evil spreads in ever-widening ripples, and then, abruptly, the force is spent, and the ripples subside. This, according to Prof. Allardyce Nicoll, is what Shakespeare is trying to tell us in "Julius Caesar" and "Macbeth."

Now Germany has been at war economically since 1934, and her army has been mobilized and on the move since the invasion of Austria in 1937. It has followed Hitler's magic rainbow in Czecho-Slovakia, in Poland, in Norway, in Holland, in Belgium, in France, in Greece; but the golden end of the rainbow is no nearer. Victory after victory has led only to war after war. Would it be astonishing if the Germans are thoroughly warsick at last—if they have almost arrived at the point where almost any peace better than a Punic peace seems desirable? It may be, indeed, that this fear of a peace of vengeance following a British victory is Hitler's last remaining hold upon his people.

Contrary to Senator Nye's thesis, all this is a reason for redoubling rather than relaxing our efforts, but it also brings nearer the moment for that master stroke of diplomacy whereby victory and peace can be achieved.

Past The Deadline

Weeks ago, when Gen. Marshall made his first plea for extension of Army service, he said it was imperative for Congress to reach a final decision on the matter by August 1. The deadline has come and gone and Congress is still fumbling along in an effort to find the right "formula." In the circumstances its indecision, not to say its inclination to pursue the customary tactics of political horse trading, outrages the first principle of good government. The issue at stake is clear: whether or not we are to have an Army that is capable of meeting any threat to American security. Congress can help to give the country such an Army by declaring that the national interest is imperiled—as it obviously is. It could have done this several weeks ago. It could have made use of an emergency proviso in the selective service bill which gives the President the power to extend military service in the interest of national defense. Instead, it has debated this provision and that and has finally forced the Administration to offer a compromise amendment limiting the President's blanket power of service extension and substituting a specific 18-month extension.

Today the Senate begins debate of this amendment. Yet there is no assurance of immediate action, for Senator Walsh and others claim that even this amendment is a "breach of good faith" by the Government, though these legislators know that no such breach is involved. Their argument—that selectees, when inducted, were under the impression that they were to serve for a year and no longer—has not changed substantially since the beginning of the debate. It is an argument which, aside from being false, makes no allowance for, say, the situation in the Far East, where Japanese militarists swear that a spark is all that is needed to cause an American-Japanese explosion. Nor does it meet squarely this country's crying need for an adequate armed force, with or without such a crisis. Seemingly it will take nothing less than a deliberate attack or series of attacks upon American soil to convince some persons of the immediate need of service extension.

Faced with this mentality the Administration has, of course, been forced to compromise. Its proposed amendment, if approved, will at least fulfill the Chief of Staff's over-all demand for the legal right to continue the military training of the men now in service. No intelligent legislator with an understanding of the implications for us of the aggressive impulse as exhibited all over the world will be so shortsighted as to try to block the Administration amendment.

Careful, Miss Thompson

Everybody knows that Miss Dorothy Thompson's heart is usually in the right place, but there are occasions when she permits it to run away with her head. One of these occasions was when she wrote the piece which appears under her signature in the current issue of Harper's Magazine. It is called "Who Goes Nazi?" and offers a formula whereby Miss Thompson's countless readers can determine for themselves just which of their acquaintances, if it came to the clutch, would turn Nazi, and which would remain true to the American way of life. Miss Thompson tells how she applies the test to other guests at the parties to which she is invited. "It's fun—a rather macabre sort of fun—this parlor game of 'Who Goes Nazi?' . . . Try it at the next big party you go to."

The general idea, if we grasp it, is that nice people will never go Nazi, even in a crisis, whereas people who are not nice are almost certain to do so. Or, to put it just a little more baldly than Miss Thompson does: all the people we like will be true to freedom, decency and democracy, no matter what the pressure, while people we don't like ought to be watched pretty carefully. It's as simple as that! Of course Miss Thompson explains how it all works out in terms of Viennese psychology, and why we had better keep a sharp and suspicious eye on all masochistic women, horsy bank presidents, frustrated intellectuals, frightened speculators, tyrannical labor leaders, and spoiled young men.

With all respect—and we have a great deal of respect and admiration for Miss Thompson, as our readers well know—with all respect, we suggest that this is a singularly dangerous kind of nonsense to be putting into our heads at this time. There is certainly such a thing as carrying one's zeal for freedom to the point where any sort of freedom becomes impossible. There are even extremes where fanatical Naziism and fanatical anti-Naziism can meet. Miss Thompson says that her test has nothing to do with "race, color, creed or social condition." All the same, the business of dividing people into political sheep and goats by some law of psychological determinism has little if anything to recommend it over the practice of so dividing them by laws of racial or economic determinism. To be sure, Miss Thompson has seen Nazis at much closer range than most of us, but when it comes to sizing up personalities at first glance, even she can be mistaken:

> When I finally walked into Adolf Hitler's salon at the Kaiserhof Hotel, I was convinced I was meeting the future dictator of Germany. In something less than 50 seconds I was sure I was not . . . . I thought of the man before me, seated, an equal between Hindenburg and Bruening, and involuntarily I smiled. Oh, Adolf! Adolf! You are out of luck!

Those words written nearly ten years ago have been dragged out against Miss Thompson several times, and we hate to drag them out again. But it is just as well to take them into account before we all begin writing out suspect lists of all the people whose personalities we don't happen to like.

STREET SCENE

Dragging my heels above the gutter's grime
I watch the waning of the afternoon;
A clock chimes, and a hundred hurrying feet
Take up the pattern of its thin square tune.
The street is full of noises and the reek
Of day-old smells, and dust, and urchins' cries,
And groping ghosts of things that should be men,

And girls with sunlit hair and wistful eyes,
And patient Orientals trundling bags
Of dirty clothes in little creaky carts,
And withered women carrying parcels home

JOHN V. HICKS.

"And Everywhere That Mary Went . . . ."

The Post Impressionist

Mr. Gandhi

In the first place, Mr. Gandhi had a great deal to do with my embarking, for a round-the-world cruise, on the President Polk, or, rather, Mr. Gandhi's press agent had.

In the ship's news column of our local paper, that gentleman had written—"Captain C——, of the President Polk, has as his assistant in command a long, lanky, yellow-furred feline who came on board three trips ago in Bombay. Because of the figure the cat cut, the captain immediately dubbed him, 'Mr Gandhi, in honor of a certain person of importance in Bombay and elsewhere. Mr. Gandhi has laid down a strict set of rules for his own treatment. Unless he is served minced chicken breast and cream—not milk—he shows unmistakable signs of being about to go on a hunger strike—which, of course, would affect the ship's morale and endanger its prestige. Moreover, he wishes to be served his meals only by the captain's perfectly trained China boy. All other members of the crew, all passengers—and all ports of call are scorned by Mr. Gandhi. For him, travel means one thing—to keep going with the minimum of effort and maximum of comfort. He is happiest when the ship is in motion.

"Once in a great while, he may be seen strolling about the sunny sports deck. But, for the most part, he prefers the contemplative life and, when out of doors, chooses to lie either in the middle of the miniature golf course or in the cushioned seat of one of the passenger's deck chairs. To be sure, he believes thoroughly in nonresistance, never having been known to bare a claw. But he is stubbornly determined and, once ousted, will go right back to the place where he has chosen to be.

"Far from a sociable creature, he, nevertheless, expects the captain to request his presence at all social functions on board ship but reserves the right, on such occasions, to remain under the captain's bunk or elsewhere in hiding and of refusing to come out to join in the sociability."

I had expected to meet Mr. Gandhi immediately upon my going up onto the sports deck the first morning out. I had already made the acquaintance of the captain, for I had been assigned a place at his table in the dining room the night before. The gladdest-faced Irishman I had ever seen—he joined me as I strolled somewhat cautiously around the icy deck.

"I've been wondering," I remarked, "where you've been keeping Mr. Gandhi. I'm so anxious to meet him, for I've read all about him."

"Have you now?" the captain grinned. "Well, I tell you—Mr. Gandhi won't be out on deck today. He has no use for the cold. So he'll be staying curled up in my cabin. But when we get into warmer waters, he'll be out to sun himself. However, if you'd like to make his acquaintance before then, why not come have tea with me this afternoon at five?"

Precisely at that hour, in my best bib and tucker, I arrived, escorted by a deck steward, at the wide-open door of the captain's cabin. A Southern couple had preceded me there and were being helped to generous cups of tea and man-sized sandwiches by the captain's—and Mr. Gandhi's—China boy. I glanced around the large, comfortable cabin with its high bunk, heaped with bright cushions, its wall adorned with gay pictures, and its chest of drawers topped off with a motley of a contented man's personal belongings. But there was no sign of the cat I had come to see.

Finally, I made bold to ask outright—"But where is Mr. Gandhi, captain?"

"Mr. Gandhi?" exclaimed the Southern lady, almost upsetting her tea cup. "Why, Captain, you don't mean to say Mr. Gandhi is on board!"

"Himself!" the captain grinned. He beckoned to the China boy and said a few words in Chinese to him.

Instantly the boy got down on all fours and crept under the bunk. A second later, he emerged, holding by the nape of its scrawny neck the most forlorn cat I have ever seen.

But I am a true cat lover. I bent over the arm of my chair to stroke the gentle, unprepossessing creature. The ship gave a sudden lurch. Over I went, the chair on top of me, both chair and I missing Mr. Gandhi by a perilously narrow margin. While I was being helped to my feet, he slunk back under the bunk.

His policy toward me thereafter was one of strict avoidance rather than of nonresistance. However, despite his attitude, that did not change throughout the long voyage. I left a goodby for Mr. Gandhi when I bade the captain farewell at Kobe, Japan.

"Do you suppose he'll ever tire of travel?" I inquired politely.

"I hope not. I'd miss him," the captain replied succinctly but with deep feeling in his voice.

A few days ago, in the ship's news column of the same paper where I had first read of him, I came on this item—"Mr. Gandhi of the President Polk, famous feline, second in command of that worthy vessel, left the ship abruptly when it last put in at Bombay. All efforts to restrain him were futile. It was very evident to all who witnessed his departure that, after circling the globe more than a dozen times, he had decided there was 'no place like home.'"

But I myself feel that Mr. Gandhi was taking no chances with floating mines and such and that he will resume his travels as soon as the war is over and the waters of the world are once more declared safely navigable.

Letters To The Editor

All communications must carry the writer's name and address, though pen names are permitted at the editor's discretion. In fairness to other correspondents, letters should be held to 300 words. Letters are subject to condensation.

"Special Policemen"

On Sunday, July 27, the usually reliable Washington Post made a serious editorial error. The editorial was headlined "Special Policemen" and outlined the fallacy of granting law-enforcement powers to special police not under the District's authority. May we go on record, first, as agreeing with the editorial's point of view—on that score. However, special policemen, as understood and identified by this editorial, can be and are appointed solely under constituted authority vested in the Metropolitan Police Department of the District of Columbia. In a great many cases, though not all of them, these are men retired from the Metropolitan force!

Furthermore, and this is the important thing, the bill now under consideration in Congress can be and is only a Federal matter and deals solely with special police already under Federal jurisdiction, and in all cases, already vested with full police authority and law-enforcement powers, but as restricted by law to Federal properties and premises. The bill provides specifically for recognition of this fact in renaming the forces affected, and for pay increases commensurate with the actual performance of these legally delegated powers to this specific body of police officers.

We regret exceedingly that The Post could have such an incomplete understanding of the facts, that it would permit an editorial expression setting out these glaring inconsistencies, and in an editorial to create such an unfair misconception in the minds of the general public.

New Square

The action yesterday of the American Legion in unanimously passing a resolution asking that the area where Treasury House is now located be named "Woodrow Wilson Square," in honor of our wartime Commander in Chief, should be heartily indorsed by Americans everywhere.

The action of the American Legion reveals that we now appreciate the great work of Woodrow Wilson. It has been said his conception of the League of Nations "remains at once the highest, the most noble, the most sane and the most practical path upon which the men and women of every land should set their feet; on which they should march forward and for which they should strive with might and main."

It is to be hoped that our District Commissioners will speedily act on this excellent suggestion of the American Legion that this important ground may be forever known as "Woodrow Wilson Square."

Pleasing Enemies

Ah, well, Mr. Stimson; can there not be "near treason" in effect, as well as intent? When a man of high position uses his intelligence in a way that pleases our enemies and some of our enemies are making the same efforts that he is, his just reward is severe criticism. About 99 per cent of it from all who are loyal to our country. President Roosevelt doesn't want war.

Hitler's the man to criticize. Mr. Roosevelt knows that when a man is going to pick a fight with you, it's best to put yourself in shape for the occasion. Yes, and to get in the first blows if you can.

Hall Of Fame

Refreshing contrast to the depressing news which has featured the front page of our newspapers for many months past is provided in two separate news columns on the front page of Saturday's Post.

In times of an alleged great national emergency, it is comforting and inspiring to learn that we have at least two courageous souls in Congress, both fit figures for the future Hall of Fame.

According to reports, one demonstrates his prowess by attacking a crippled veteran of the last war. The other proves his courage by demolishing a dangerous mimeograph machine. This suggests that we have, at least, two members of Congress capable of rendering valiant combat service in the event our country goes to war. One should be able to distinguish himself by mopping up the enemy wounded. The other would be invaluable for destroying enemy panzer equipment (inanimate objects).

Of course, we have other brave men in Congress. They have shown their ability to assassinate the character of patriotic American citizens who have the temerity to disagree with their own personal views as to what constitutes the Nation's best interests. These latter men should prove efficient as Fifth Columnists among our enemies.

Congress in the main appears to be giving serious consideration to the vital matters confronting us. It is therefore extremely regrettable that the deplorable actions of some of its members detract from their good works and discourage unanimity.

Monkey Business

Shades of the Poetic Past. Out of the stars you and your narration reporter are hereby awarded the grand prize, the Switzer Cheese Medal and the Order of the Green Garter.

When the magnificent monkey made the front page with all his photographic poses, what's the use of getting worried about the heat wave or the blitzkrieg that is fighting civilization. Shows that the grand old Washington Post has preserved its sense of humor and still remains the most readable morning paper on this good earth.

Congratulations to you and to Scott Hart and the roving photographer.

Isolationists

Obscurely placed in California there is a memorial tablet to the pitiful group of isolationist Senators of 1917. Who remembers these men? How many can even recall their names? Briefly they played their little game of Blind Man's Buff as they stupidly gave aid and comfort to the foes of democracy.

In 20 years—unless the Nazis rule the world—similar oblivion will have overtaken Wheeler, Nye, the Clarks, Walsh and Reynolds.

Thank heaven no Virginians are included in this list. In the Old Dominion one finds no witting or unwitting Lavals or Musserts. At least there are none in public life.

A Great Leader

You are not prisoned in idleness, and therefore may not be dependent on the radio, hence you may not have heard the short-wave announcement from Germany that we are to have a great leader arising in our midst.

I am wondering who may be the hero of this prophecy. Of course, he must be persona grata to Hitler, else there would have been no prophecy. Can it be one of our professional isolationists? Wheeler? I think not. There has never been a great leader who talked from dawn to dewy eve and repeated himself persistently. There has never been a great leader who was simply obstructive and never built for the future. Can it be Johnson or Clark? Not a bit of it. Nye or Taft? Do you think so? Reynolds? Ah! Vandenberg? A man of fine mind who has elements of greatness, but fate seems to have stacked the cards against him, besides, he would not please Hitler.

Could it possibly be Mr. Hoover? A good man and a just, but no longer a great leader in his own party. I have heard him make impressive speeches, logical in reasoning, forcible in thought, and sincere in expression, but in his last radio talk he missed the mark.

And now we come to the more probable one, Mr. Charles Lindbergh, a Nordic, a man of one-time tremendous popularity in America, and a favorite with the Hitler regime in Germany. He would most certainly have the Nazi blessing, if he should acquire an overpowering leadership and be the cause of a negotiated peace, but this will never be.

Mrs. Lindbergh, in her beautiful prose favors a negotiated peace and at the same time expresses the belief that our country would be lifted up as a shining light toward which the other nations of the world might look in emulation. But Hitler will not give us time to correct the error of our ways.

MRS. M. F. TOWNSEND.
Lenoir, N. C., July 28.

Mrs. Helen Miller

I wish to bring to your attention the deplorable undemocratic action of Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins in summarily suspending Mrs. Helen Miller, a Labor Department employe, on unproven charges of "communism."

Such apparent antiunion discrimination on the part of the department formed for the purpose of protecting the interests of American labor cannot be countenanced. It is contrary to our accepted manner of conducting employe-employer relations.

If the department's reasons for Mrs. Miller's suspension are a fact, why does the Secretary deny Mrs. Miller's request for a fair hearing with opportunity to cross-examine any of the department's witnesses against her, such hearing to be conducted before an impartial board and not one of Madam Perkin's subordinates? Save the world from the Red flood in the name of Christianity.

Be sentimental about the lost lives in the slaughter house of Europe.

Assail Winston Churchill and the English ruling class.

Assert that we are totally unprepared.

Weep about the unemployed in this country.

Talk about the invincibility of the Germany army.

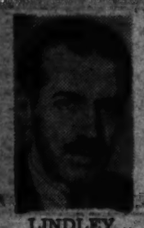
National Morale

By Ernest K. Lindley

Recent Symbolic Events

ANY REPORT on so intangible a subject as morale must allow for a wide margin of error. But it deserves to be stated that the frame of mind of many Government officials and many of their supporters has brightened markedly in recent days.



LINDLEY

Two events of symbolic importance helped to clear the air. One was the double apology to Senator Wheeler by the Secretaries of War and of the Navy. Secretary Knox's, given privately in a call at the Senator's office, was on account of the admiral who told Wheeler's son there was no place for him in the Navy when he said that he agreed with his father's views on foreign policy.

Secretary Stimson's, for accusing Wheeler of setting out to circularize men in the armed forces, was the first public acknowledgment of error in the long and often ugly fight between the Administration and the most influential of the Senate's isolationists.

The President's methods of handling Wheeler and other extreme isolationists, however, have been criticized privately by many of his wise advisers. Wheeler's intemperance has been matched on the side of the President and several of his spokesmen. The result, it is felt by the President's friendly critics, has been to draw attention to the personal antagonism, which is there, and to weaken the solid arguments against Wheeler's position.

THE NOTION that everyone who does not agree fully with the President's foreign policy is a Nazi or a near-traitor is abhorrent to the liberal tradition with which most Administration officials consciously associate themselves. Some of them would like to see muzzles put on Secretary Ickes and others among the more intelligent Administration spokesmen, leaving obvious exaggeration and diatribe, which they believe to be self-defeating, to the opposition.

The second symbolic event from which Administration members took satisfaction was the appeal for national unity made by Associate Supreme Court Justice Reed at Bridgeport on Tuesday. Reed is the first member of the highest tribunal to speak in this vein during the current international crisis.

More tangible were the decisions of the President on two administrative appointments which had been hanging fire. He made Brig. Gen. Lewis Hershey director of the Selective Service System, a straightout recognition of merit. And, finally after nine months of intramural quarreling, he set up an agency to direct economic warfare. The choice of Vice President Wallace as chairman of a council on policy was a halfway victory for jealous Cabinet members over the advocates of a single administrator. But the President was unable to find a full-time administrator who had both the force and prestige to handle men of Cabinet rank.

THE WHOLE EMERGENCY defense Administration is still seriously handicapped by overlapping, weak personnel, red tape, and lack of over-all planning. The President does not seem to be half as impressed with these shortcomings as are some of his ablest lieutenants. This may be because he keeps his eyes on the defense production figures, which are rising at a heartening rate.

The President saw the defense production effort of World War I backstage, and helped to direct it, as Assistant Secretary of the Navy. He believes, as he has told many friends, that this effort is substantially superior. And, in that appraisal he is seconded by the few men hereabouts who have had the dual experience, including Bernard M. Baruch.

Many feel that the President has set too low a standard of comparison, since American industry is far better equipped technically and managerially than it was a generation ago. Excepting those who are too idolatrous to be critical, there is almost unanimous agreement that the defense production program could be greatly expedited by better management in Washington. Nevertheless, the output figures are rising, heading toward heights which are beyond the reach of any other country in the world.

AMONG OTHER morale-lifting influences must be listed: the tenacious resistance of the Russians, the fact that we are at last showing our teeth to Japan, and the many signs that Gen. Marshall is going to win his fight to obtain extended service for the selectees, guardsmen, and reservists.

On the list also belong the latest Fortune polls, revealing much greater support for the President's foreign policy and willingness to go farther than the more timid Government officials have felt justified in relying upon. It is almost impossible to ask questions on foreign policy which are not "loaded," but the more carefully graduated Fortune questions certainly lead to a more reliable index of public opinion than do the blunter and more lopsided single queries put in the recent polls of the New York Daily News and Chicago Tribune.

This rise in optimism in Government circles may be short-lived. Hard fights impend in Congress over price-control legislation, not to mention a tax bill which still falls short of the need to prevent inflation. But the improvement of morale is indubitable at the beginning of August, 1941, 13½ months after the fall of France shook the Nation into alert concern for its safety.

Triple-A And Wheat

By Mark Sullivan

A Personal Story

THIS IS about a lady who owns a farm in Warren County, Pa.; her name is Miss Esther Newbold. What is here narrated is based upon letters written me by Miss Newbold, together with an accumulation of formidable documents and official letters which have descended upon her from Washington during the past three months. Including also visits to her farm by divers Government officials, one of them bearing a title hitherto unknown to me; unknown, I think, to anybody in America, until the New Deal and AAA—a "farm checker."

Last October, Miss Newbold planted 37 acres of wheat—in that part of the country, wheat is planted in the fall. She planted as much as she thought suitable to her farm. Nobody told her to plant more or plant less. She had never had any contact with Triple-A. She had never been what they call a "participating farmer." She had never "signed up" as they say. She had never received any "farm benefits"—which is Triple-A's term for cash gifts from the United States Treasury, given to those farmers who do what Triple-A tells them to. Miss Newbold supposed she was, as she rather plaintively says in her letter, an independent American, free to plant what she deemed best, and as much as she deemed wise.

She planted in October. Seven months passed. Come May, as they say in the movies. Her wheat was about half grown—it would be ripe for harvesting about July 1.

ON MAY 12 Miss Newbold received a letter from a local agent of Triple-A. The letter told her that she might be subject to a penalty. Might be, not necessarily would be. It would not be decided until May 31, when there would be a referendum on whether allotments (quotas) should be applied to the 1941 wheat crop. Meanwhile, the Triple-A letter explained to Miss Newbold how she might, as a precaution, safeguard herself against the possible penalty. The letter told her that her allotment was 20 acres—which would put her 17 acres in excess of her allotment. The letter, in a spirit of helpful suggestion, said:

"Those who have planted in excess . . . may get into compliance by plowing down, or otherwise utilizing for soil building purposes by clipping and leaving on the land the wheat on the excess acres. This must be done by May 25."

Here, then, was the lady farmer's situation: She had planted 37 acres—and had a perfect right to. Even under Triple-A theory, she had a perfect right, for the allotment (quota) system was not in effect on wheat at the time Miss Newbold planted, last October.

THEN, on May 12 she was told that the allotment system might be put in force—the decision would not be made until May 31. Meanwhile, if Miss Newbold wished to guard against the possibility of penalty, she might plow under 17 acres of her wheat, or cut it down and let it lie on the ground. (She could, if she chose, plant some other crop on the 17 acres after they were denuded of wheat.) But she must do this by May 25—and she would not know whether her sacrifice was necessary until six days later, May 31, when decision would be made about applying the allotment system to wheat.

Miss Newbold was disturbed. She wrote to Pennsylvania Senator Davis. Senator Davis turned her letter over to Triple-A headquarters at Washington. From Triple-A headquarters Miss Newbold received voluminous letters. But they gave Miss Newbold no consolation—only confirmation of what she had previously been told.

MISS NEWBOLD did not plow under or mow down any of her wheat. She let it all stand, harvested the whole 37 acres. The wheat from 20 of the acres, Triple-A permitted her to sell freely. But as to her 17 excess acres, she must do one of four things. The four were carefully made clear to her in a letter from Triple-A:

1. She could pay a penalty of 49 cents per bushel and then sell the wheat. (The penalty, 49 cents a bushel, is about half the price—it is about a 50 per cent penalty.)

2 and 3. These are hardly ways out. She could put her wheat in storage, under seal, and under regulations of Triple-A. She could leave the wheat in storage for a year. Then, next planting season, she could accept a different kind of penalty. She could conform to Triple-A rules, accept the quota imposed on her, and plant less than the quota—as much less as would be equal to her old wheat in storage.

4. She could make a present of her excess to Triple-A—just give it to them without any return.

Miss Newbold, in her letter to me, says plaintively that she is "an American supposed to belong to a glorious democracy." She thinks that what has been done to her is "unjust and arbitrary." She thinks that the allotment—imposed on May 31, on wheat planted the previous October—is a "retroactive law."

Certainly it seems to be either a retroactive law or a retroactive regulation. It would seem to be what the Constitution forbids: "No ex post facto law shall be passed." Maybe, if Miss Newbold or someone else will take a case up with the Supreme Court, we may find out how the new majority on the Court interprets the Constitution, when the Constitution inconveniences Triple-A.

Economic Black List

By Betty Kirk

New Defense Board's Job

MEXICO, D. F.—One of the first jobs of the new Economic Defense Board should be the direction of publicity in support of the black list of totalitarian or pro-Axis firms by United States commerce throughout the world. Mexico has refused the Nazi insistence that it should protest the list, but the refusal of business or government officials to talk to the press indicates resentment and misinterpretation of what could well be built up into a democratic crusade if the proper officials would bestir themselves to make clear the full implications of the act and its consequences.

The long term fate of United States business may now be at stake, for the reaction to the decisive measure to boycott totalitarian business may turn into just the sort of a boomerang for which the Axis propaganda machine has been waiting. That it is ready to cut loose full blast against the political and trade implications of this commercial warfare is apparent.

THE ONLY WAY to block this is to beat them to it. Democracy must take the offensive if it is to survive. And in total war propaganda is at least half of the battle. On the subject of the black lists a democratic crusade can be built on the following principles:

1. Freezing out totalitarian and pro-Axis firms is just half of the game. The other half is to divert into the firms of friendly nationals, whether Mexican, Brazilian, or of any other Latin American nation, the business being blocked from the Axis. That United States business houses will profit, too, is obvious but because of their yet limited representation, the lion's share of the spoils will go to Latin Americans of democratic affiliations.

2. Tossing this business into the laps of friendly Latin American houses offers a unique opportunity for strengthening the internal economy of every country affected. As each is strengthened in his own trade territory an expanding market for United States exports is created, for only as Latin America prospers will we eventually prosper ourselves.

3. DRAMATIZING the necessity which impelled the black listing. This necessity was the dumping of subsidized German goods on the Latin American market to undercut United States and British goods legitimately produced and sold. A prime example occurring in Mexico shows how this works.

On January 21 a shipment of German hardware arrived at the Pacific port of Manzanillo. It had been eight months en route, traveling from Germany through Russia, across the Trans-Siberian Railway to Vladivostok, and by Japanese boat to Manzanillo. From that port it was sent to Mexico City by train.

Yet after this eight months trip across half the world it was sold on the Mexican market at prices below those quoted on United States hardware which only had to cross the Rio Grande. Moreover the shipment totaled 20 tons, enough knives and forks to supply the Mexican market for the next 15 years.

Yet the German merchants here could sell these goods at a profit because their government had subsidized them at the source, paid the fantastic transportation costs, and instructed them to under sell all democratic products.

THIS IS HOW the trade war works. Germany as usual took the offensive. And this single Mexican incident is only a tiny arrow pointing to the avalanche of goods produced by European slave labor which will be dumped on markets throughout the world when the war is over. It was to choke off this attack before it could be wholly launched that the black listing was made imperative.

4. Barter goods promised by the totalitarians to the Latin American nations for their raw materials often failed to arrive. Mexico again offers a glaring example of the defilcations on the glorious promises of goods to be delivered promptly after signing of the contracts. After the oil expropriation and the boycott of Mexico's petroleum by the Standard Oil Co. and the Royal Dutch Shell the Mexican government was forced to sell to Germany and Italy and their terms were barter.

Accordingly millions of barrels of Mexican oil were sent to Germany and Italy to feed their growing war machines. Heavy machinery, electrical equipment, and even three oil tankers were contracted in return. Practically none of these ever arrived. It is true that the outbreak of the war prevented delivery on many contracts but others were long overdue before the war began. The barter accordingly worked perfectly for the Germans and Italians. For the Mexicans it was an economic disaster.

5. United States goods were subsidizing the Nazi propaganda machines. Percentages of all profits made by German or other Axis merchants on United States goods were paid, either voluntarily or by coercion, into the Axis Fifth Column funds which in turn were spent to build up hatred and distrust of the United States throughout Latin America. A flagrant example of this was the German drug firm of Beick Felix, which represented duPont products for the whole of Mexico, advertising in all anti-United States propaganda sheets.

6. The lesson of the last war taught that German merchants who took on the distribution of United States goods when they could no longer get German products promptly dropped them when the war was over. This resulted in United States products supporting the German merchants throughout the war, but in their being ruthlessly abandoned when the Germans could go back to their own merchandise. It was in protection against such a trick being pulled again that the black lists were made.

7. THE BLACK LISTS were made only after months of investigation of each firm involved. The investigations were impartial since their object was not to check the flow of United States goods but only to hamstring those firms which used our goods as a tool with which to destroy our democracy.

8. Since the adoption of the principle of continental solidarity at the Havana Conference any subversive activity or propaganda against the United States works automatically against the government in which the business is located. The American nations are resolved to stand firm and united. The Axis nations are determined to divide them. And the greatest channel through which the Axis powers spied and plotted were the business houses of their nationals or of sympathizers. A blow against such centers of disruption is accordingly a blow for democracy throughout the continent.

This is the picture as it should be presented to bewildered Latin Americans. It is the true picture of cause and effect which has as its object the frustration of non-American activities and the strengthening of the democratic ideal and economy throughout the hemisphere. If fully explained, those who are now antagonized or confused may easily be turned into converts.

THE OTHER SIDE of the picture, far to the left, is the persistent attacks being made by Vicente Lombardo Toledano, the Mexican labor leader, against "North American capitalism." Senor Lombardo Toledano, as president of the Latin American Confederation of Labor, has just sent a clarion call to affiliated labor organizations throughout the continent "to oppose the financial monopolists of the United States who would make our countries colonies of North American capitalism."

He too is beating the drums against the black lists, agitating thousands of workers into believing that they will overnight be thrown out of work by the action of the "Yankee imperialists." His solution is for the Latin American governments to nationalize and administer the German and Italian properties or to convet them into workers' cooperatives. However, until such drastic action can be taken the leader of the only existing confederation of labor in Latin America incites his followers "To take urgent action to impede the immediate closing of the German and Italian firms and their replacement by North American capital."

The above eight points would spike the guns of Senor Lombardo Toledano too. But unless they are explained and emphasized by the spokesmen who announced the black lists originally we will have taken only half a step in the new trade war. And half a step is worse than no step at all. For it leaves the field wide open for the Nazis and the Communists to revive their cries of "Yankee Imperialists" and "Dollar Diplomacy," an opportunity made possible by our own grievous neglect.

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips

Crisis Again!

The p. m. curfew on gasoline sales and the probability that autoists in the East may be cut down to as little as 5 gallons of gas a week is the first really effective step by the Democrats to put America back on its feet.

The decision is to close all pumping stations from 7 p. m. to 7 a. m. at first. This will mean that you will see thousands of people walking around after dark who haven't done it before in years.

Anything like a 5 gallons a week rule will make necking practically compulsory in this country, instead of optional. If a boy friend keeps driving instead of parking at the nearest point he will classify himself as a subversive influence.

And what can a girl's attitude? be?

If George turns into the first lane he comes to can she sternly say, "Don't park! I mean it!" and be doing her duty by the Administration?

Can she insist that he back out and keep driving, without holding up the national defense program?

Won't she be classifying herself as un-American?

It's a point for the girls of the country to start studying now. Is parking in times of a national gasoline crisis a national duty, in fact? Will a gal be helping America, not to mention China, England, Russia and all the oppressed peoples everywhere, if she climbs into the car and chirps, "Park as soon as possible, Harvey. There must always be an England!"?

America has as yet no idea of the complications that will result from gas rationing. It will breed envy and hatred anew. Up until now the poor have been envious of the rich. But the tables will be turned when a man in an eight cylinder limousine getting only about 7 miles to a gallon has to quit driving early and watch his poor neighbor keep flying around in a buggy that gives 18 or 20.

We may even see the evils of liquor prohibition returning to mark gasoline prohibition. It isn't hard to imagine a speakeasy pumping station where you can get a gallon if you have a club card and the secret knock.

Perhaps we shall meet the influential neighbor who leads you down to the garage and whispers that he wants to show you some eight-year-old gas he got, "just off the boat."

And the fellow who makes homebrew gas and oil.

After Six Weeks

By Barnet Nover

The Longest Campaign of the War

THE DAY that Germany goes on the defensive, that day she will have lost the war regardless of the number of men she may still have in the field and the number of countries she has conquered and the extent of her still effective war potential. For Hitler, as was pointed out long ago, is a man on a bicycle who can keep his perch as long as the wheels are moving and moving forward.

NOVER

It would be wishful thinking of a dangerous sort to assume that the lack of progress made by the German war machine in Russia during the last few weeks means that Germany has gone or is about to go on the defensive. She still has vast unexpended powers. With the help of her Fifth Column elements, the Spanish Falange and Gen. Franco, the Spanish dictator, Germany is waging a political offensive against the United States in Latin America. This may sooner or later be coupled by a drive to West Africa with Vichy turning Dakar over to Hitler as it turned Indo-China over to the Japanese. The possibility is so real that Acting Secretary Sumner Welles found it necessary to send a sharp warning to the Petain regime. And the Russian war has not yet reached the point where a German victory can no longer be regarded as a possibility.

THE FACT REMAINS, however, that the war on the Eastern Front has now lasted longer than any previous campaign waged by the Nazis. It took them three weeks to smash the Polish armies, a month to make themselves masters of Norway, less than that time to overrun Yugoslavia and Greece, while the campaign in the Low Countries and France was over and done with in just over five weeks. What is more, the decisive action which made a German victory inevitable in each campaign came well before the enemy was prepared to acknowledge defeat.

GERMANY AND RUSSIA have now been at war for more than six weeks. This circumstance has in itself resulted in important consequences. What is more important than the advantages already gained by the enemies of Hitler as a result of Russia's stout resistance, is that these six weeks have produced no decisive results for the Nazis.

It is true that they conquered a great deal of territory and (though at a very real cost to themselves) inflicted considerable losses on the Russians. But unless and until the Russian armies cease to exist as an organized fighting force the war in the East will not have been won. On the contrary, the longer the struggle in Russia lasts, the less likelihood there will be of a German victory regardless of the final outcome of the titanic struggle on Soviet soil.

WELL, the Russian armies are still in the field and give no indication of crumbling under the impact of Hitler's hammer blows. Three weeks ago German newspapermen were confidently proclaiming that Nazi troops were at the gates of Kiev, that the capture of Leningrad would not long be delayed and that the road to Moscow was wide open. These cities are still in Russian hands.

This does not necessarily mean that the German war machine has at last been halted in its tracks. Whether that is so or not remains to be seen. It does mean that the margin of safety for Germany, a margin that seemed ample for all purposes at the time Hitler launched his attack on Russia, has been whittled down to a perilous point. Within a month bad weather alone may immobilize the German armies in the East and Hitler would then be faced by the necessity of having to conduct a long, slow war of attrition. Germany cannot afford such a war for with American economic power steadily being mobilized on behalf of her enemies the scales would in due course be so weighted against the Reich that she would find herself on the defensive, weaker while her enemies grow stronger, increasingly unsure in mind while they become more confident.

ALREADY the past six weeks have created problems for Hitler in every part of the vast domain which his armies have forcibly brought within the "new order." In the conquered territories the shock of defeat has now sufficiently been dissipated, the hope of ultimate liberation so definitely revived, that increasingly bold measures are being taken against the conqueror. No wonder that the Nazis have been forced to take new and stronger measures to repress dissident and rebellious elements in points as far removed as Norway, Occupied France and Yugoslavia.

At the present time the Nazi armies of occupation are still strong enough to cope with any major uprisings. The time for revolt is not yet. But it would hardly be in Hitler's interest at the present time to have to reinforce the garrisons in Western Europe. He may need those reserves to reinforce his armies in the East. The longer the war in Russia continues, therefore, the more Germany may have to face the unpleasant dilemma of deciding which front—the Russian front or the civilian front in the West—needs stiffening most while unable to send reinforcements to both.

Indicative of this dilemma is the circumstance that Germany has been unable to reply in kind to the persistent raids of the R. A. F. not only on the invasion ports but also on such German centers as Hamburg, Cologne, Bremen and Berlin. The importance of liquidating the war in the East as speedily as possible is paramount for Hitler. But if that development is too long delayed the very gains he has made after two years of war will cease being assets and become liabilities.

Thomas Urges Talks to Avert Auto Idleness

By Louis Stark

Copyright by New York Times

Buffalo, N. Y., Aug. 3.—A Government-convened conference of automobile management, labor and Government experts to formulate a program for preventing a threatened dislocation of the automobile industry due to defense requirements was advocated here today by R. J. Thomas, president of the United Automobile Workers of America, C. I. O.

On the eve of the union's sixth annual convention opening here tomorrow, Thomas described in detail over the Columbia Broadcasting System network the specific proposals of the union to cope with the possible curtialment of the automobile industry by 50 per cent.

If the drastic curtailment were made so that defense orders could proceed, he said, the union would not object for its members would prefer to work on defense orders. However, he added, the union was told in Washington that not only would its members not be turned over to work on defense projects but that "plants would shut down and that some large automobile producing centers like Flint, Pontiac and Saginaw might become ghost towns."

"When we asked the reason for this we were told that there is a shortage of steel and other raw materials needed for national defense," continued the automobile union president.

Thomas said the union had concrete plans for such a conference as he suggested.

"First and foremost," he said, we must at once coordinate all available tooling facilities in the industry so that skilled help and tool room equipment may be concentrated on the task of adapting automobile industry machinery to defense production needs. At the same time, we must take steps to make use of the C. I. O.'s suggestions formulated by President Philip Murray, for achieving the maximum output of steel. The program of the Aluminum Workers of America to increase the production of aluminum must be utilized to full advantage.

"The Government and industry must take steps to divert steel and other defense materials from non-defense industries on an equitable basis so that the automobile industry shall not bear the brunt of the shortage while such shortages still exist."

He said that to avoid "enforced unemployment of 200,000 or more automobile workers" the union proposed that "automobile workers be transferred to defense jobs on the basis of their seniority within a community or metropolitan area. No new employes should be imported or hired on defense jobs until local workers with seniority rights who are able to do a job, or who can be trained to do a job, are first absorbed."

Dutch East Indies Oil Fields Are Fifth Largest in World

The destruction of the Netherlands Indies oil fields, reported threatened by the authorities in case of enemy attack, would represent a loss to world markets of the fifth ranking source of supply.

"In 1940, the wells of the rich Far East possession of Queen Wilhelmina-in-exile spouted more than 60 million barrels of oil," points out a bulletin from the National Geographical Society.

"The figure for the Netherlands Indies oil output is not a large one, compared with the production of the United States, number one in the field, which accounted for well over a billion and a quarter barrels in 1940. It also is relatively small when measured against Russian production of nearly 213,000,000 barrels, or against that of Venezuela, of more than 184,000,000 barrels. Between these three big producers and the Netherlands Indies is still another important oil source, Iran, with more than 78,500,000 barrels last year.

"On the other hand, while the Netherlands Indies supply amounts to less than 3 per cent of the world's petroleum, the islands represent a significant source of energy in economic and military activities of the Far East. Normally Japan is an important customer at the Indies fields, which are operated by joint Netherlands-British and American interests.

"Since the opening of the first field during the 1880's, the history of the oil industry in the Netherlands Indies has been one of almost continuous expansion. By 1942 production had risen to more than 20 million barrels; by 1936 to some 50 million barrels. The latest figure of 60,830,000 barrels shows an increase of more than three and a half million barrels in 1940 over that of 1938.

"The petroleum is found in a number of islands, including large ones of Sumatra, Java and Borneo, where important refineries serve the fields. Sumatra was the scene of pioneer development by the Royal Dutch Co. for the Exploitation of Petroleum Wells in the Netherlands Indies.

"The nearest Netherlands oil fields to the new Japanese bases at Saigon and Camranh, French Indo-China, are at Tarakan, in northeast Borneo. One of the leading operations of the islands, these fields are between 800 and 900 air miles from the Japanese stations."

Willkie Accused Of Aiding 'Plot' To Fool the People

New York, Aug. 3 (AP).—Wendell L. Willkie was accused today of being part of an "open or tacit conspiracy of Administration spokesmen to fool the American people into total war" in a statement issued by Norman Thomas, national chairman of the Socialist Party.

Thomas declared that Willkie's recent statement in refusing to debate him on the invitation of the Mayor of Elwood, Ind., was "palpably absurd" and asserted that "Mr. Willkie's excuses suggest that he is afraid of his own case."

Willkie had said "there are no war issues in the United States today."

Boom Town: D. C. Utilities Rush Facilities for Defense Needs

STRANGERS must be identified before being admitted to East Station of Washington Gas Light, opposite Navy Yard, where extensive expansion is on CAUGHT up in the swirl of the defense boom, Washington's public utilities are finding business almost too good.

The demand for more telephones, more electricity, more gas and more streetcars and buses threatens to outstrip the capacity to fill orders. For one thing, skilled mechanics and white-collar workers are becoming scarce. For another, procurement of needed equipment and supplies is not as simple as it was a year ago. Priorities! Take the telephone!

On June 30 there were 295,009 instruments in service, according to the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co. Today the number probably has reached 300,000 for the first time in the company's history.

Here is an interesting sidelight: The slackest month so far this year, in the matter of calls made, was February, yet the number was greater than that for the highest month in 1940, which was December. The figures, respectively, are 1,296,850 and 1,270,567. daily.

In 1939 the gain in telephones over the previous year was 14,000. In 1940 it was 21,000. For the first six months of this year the gain was 19,722, compared with 6,640 for the same period in 1940.

At present 1,800,000 local calls are being placed daily in the Greater Washington area, an increase of nearly 25 per cent over the same period a year ago. Outgoing toll calls are averaging 22,000 a day, a 75 per cent jump.

The "hello" girls, cable splicers, repairmen and other employes have grown in number to 5,500, an increase of 1,000 in a single year. A hundred thousand miles of wire will be installed in 1941, compared with 40,000 last year. Estimated plant improvements—new construction, equipment, etc.—in 1941 will aggregate $15,390,000, or more than 1939 and 1940 combined.

NOW take your electricity.

In June the Potomac Electric Power Co. sold 83,717,395 kilowatt-hours, an 18 per cent increase over the same month in 1940 and, of course, a new record. For the first half of this year sales aggregated 475,459,352 kilowatt-hours, a 62 million increase over the corresponding period last year.

According to the Public Utilities Commission, sales of "juice" in the five-month period ended May 31 totaled $7,374,461, in contrast with $6,770,882 last year. To make this gain possible, it was necessary to expand plant value by a shade under three million dollars.

Now being installed at the east station of the Washington Gas Light Co., on the banks of the Anacostia near the Navy Yard, are two huge sets of generator shells in anticipation of a record-breaking load this winter.

This expansion will increase the plant's capacity by 12 million cubic feet per day. That, roughly, is enough gas to heat a good-sized house for half a century. The new generators, together with the required extension of the building, will cost a million dollars, or about one-fourth of the amount which the gas company expects to spend this year on physical improvements.

The two additional boilers which are being put in at the east station were to have been oil-burners, but coal will be used instead, in deference to the defense appeal for conservation of oil.

In the first year of the preparedness program, ended last June 30, the gain in gas meters was 18,089, largest in the company's history. All but 1,000 of this total, it is interesting to note, were in residences.

Anticipating the sharp increase in consumption, the company put in orders early for supplies, equipment and other material. Even so, it is now experiencing difficulty, like other utilities, in procuring certain needs on the priorities list.

THE streetcar and bus boom is such that many pieces of rolling stock which ought to be retired because of age have to be kept in service since replacements cannot be obtained fast enough. Thirty cars and 100 buses have been on order for months. If they are delivered by midautumn it will be a mild surprise.

Capital Transit Co. carried 18,404,971 revenue passengers in June, a three and a quarter million increase over 1940. For the first six months of this year, its cars and buses hauled 107,527,241 pay riders, a 17 per cent increase. Net income for the same period was $645,441, a gain of 64 per cent.

If you care to count them, you will find 1,400 buses and trolleys—the former comprising more than half the total—on Washington streets during tomorrow morning's rush hour. Only two years ago the number would have been scarcely 1,000.

TYPICAL SOLIDER CHURCHMAN—Private James Taylor, of Fort Belvoir, whose home is in Griffin, Ga., singing yesterday at the First Baptist Church, Sixteenth and O Streets Northwest, with Representative Percy Priest, of Tennessee

A number of soldiers from the Army recreation camp in Arlington came to services in Washington churches by Army truck yesterday morning. Later a number of them were guests at dinners given by members of the congregations.

It was part of a program planned jointly by the Washington Federation of Churches and its affiliated congregations, and the recreation camp director, Capt. Donald Keith. Churches attended included the First Baptist, Mount Vernon Place Methodist, St. John's Episcopal, Covenant-First Presbyterian and Reformation Lutheran and Grace Reformed churches.

One who attended was 22-year-old Private James Taylor, of Company D, First Battalion, Fort Belvoir. He worshiped at the First Baptist Church, Sixteenth and O Streets Northwest. There, he heard Dr. Edward Hughes Pruden speak on "Exclusive Rights"—his last sermon before vacation, and joined with 800 others in Communion rites.

"It makes me feel fine to see people taking an interest in us boys," Private Taylor said before the services.

Three truckloads of Catholic soldiers went from the recreation camp to mass at Fort Myer at 9 o'clock yesterday, and many others came to Washington to attend Catholic churches of their choice.

Millions' Worth of Fun On Way to Local Screen

Jack Benny Takes Whirl at Fabulous Farce; Julie Haydon Opens Run at C. U. Tonight; News Notes and Chatter of the Theater

NOW THAT JACK BENNY is about ready to flounce his laces, frills and furbelows onto the screen at Loew's Palace as "Charley's Aunt," it is high time to note that this lusty Brandon Thomas farce is the mammy of all the record-breakers. In total number of performances, not necessarily continuous, it has outstripped even such a persistent perennial as "Uncle Tom Cabin" and has left such modern miracles as "Abie's Irish Rose" and "Tobacco Road" so far behind you can't see them for the gold dust. When it comes to the number of times it has been done, "Charley's Aunt" is the No. 2 play in the history of the theater. Shakespeare's "Hamlet" is the No. 1.

JACK BENNY

At the time, Mr. Thomas and his heirs probably thought nothing of it. But what Mr. Thomas really did when he wrote his fabulous foolishness and bequeathed the rights to his survivors was pass along a theatrical property that has earned a net profit of $15,000,000 in 50 years. This seemingly preposterous sum must be attributed principally—and there is some interest involved, too—to the sagacity of those who have controlled the play for half a century. They have laid down some pretty rigid rules and seen to it that they are lived up to.

To begin with, "Charley's Aunt" must be presented exactly as it was written. It is made up of matter that is so sure-fire that it cannot do with any whimsical tinkering. The rights to perform it are leased out for periods ranging upward from one performance and never sold outright. One performance commands a royalty of $25. Twentieth Century-Fox paid $125,000 for the American picture rights to the comedy for five years, and that after it had been picturized twice before in this country—once with Charlie Ruggles as star and again with Syd Chaplin.

Those five years will give Darryl F. Zanuck ample time to clean up twice on his Jack Benny production—once now, the first time around, and again, three years or so from now, when it assuredly will be reissued.

It is worth bearing in mind that the stage revival of "Charley's Aunt" by Day Tuttle and Dick Skinner, in New York last year, was the comedy hit of the season. The Thomas heirs no doubt got a few pennies for that one, too.

What Everybody Knows

The next release of the March of Time will celebrate Adolf Hitler as history's most colossal liar. The new issue will bear the title of "Peace—By Adolf Hitler." Coinciding with reports from Berlin that Hitler now is willing to stop the war and permit the British Empire and the United States to live in peace, side by side with his "new world order," and thoroughly documented with exclusive pictures from inside Nazi-dominated Europe, the new film will emphasize the fact that in all history no conqueror has exploited more shrewdly than Hitler the technique of systematic falsehood and betrayal. It will trace his conquests since his rise to power as the German Fuehrer.

And if it is the "Box-Office Champions for June" you have been fretting about, they were as follows: "Billy the Kid," "Blood and Sand," "In the Navy," "Love Crazy," "One Night in Lisbon" and "That Hamilton Woman." That is two for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and one each for Universal, Twentieth Century-Fox, Paramount and United Artists. All of these winners of the biggest June receipts at the country's ticket wickets have been seen and approved—more or less, in some instances—by Washington.

Brigid Regales the Cast

On the sidelines at Catholic University, during rehearsals of Philip Barry's "Hotel Universe," the blondely ethereal Julie Haydon has been entrancing her supporting players with scenes from "Shadow and Substance," the vehicle of her greatest Broadway success. The boys and girls at C. U. now know why it was. With leading man Hugh Franklin rapidly on the mend, the Barry play will open in the Campus Theater tonight at 8:30 for a six-performance run. Walter Kerr is directing and Leo Brady, James Graham, Mary Finnerty and Anthony Messurik, local favorites all, are importantly cast.

seem to be demonstrating that brunettes can be as disturbing as blondes to a young gentleman on the brink of manhood. We wouldn't know, as yet, which side the lovely Pat Dane is on and, apparently, neither does Andy

U.S.S. Tutuila In Ace Bill At Trans-Lux

Trans-Lux Theater fans will be interested in the fact that, if they attended the theater last week, they saw in one of the subjects the United States Gunboat Tutuila resting on the muddy river at Chungking, the present capital of China, and this week can see the effects of the Japanese bombing of this same boat, an incident that has caused a mighty quick apology from Tokio.

From Ethiopia, come pictures of the Italian surrender of Addis Ababba; from London, American Eagles are seen talking to the homeland via radio. From Indo-China, there are shots of Japanese military activity, and in Washington, D. C., the Soviet War Mission arrives for a series of conferences. Other inspiring news shots include: a precision drill by the R. A. A. F.; "V" victory campaign in Europe and America; Duke of Kent arriving in Canada; beautiful army review; Sergt. York meets the President; a pipeline being rushed to Canada and the Red Cross in mass drill.

An Abundance of Sports

The sport world is represented by the Arlington Park classic, with Whirlaway the loser; new season opening at Saratoga; championship rodeo, at Manhattan, Kansas; girl professional football team, at Chicago; annual trotting, at Goshen, N. Y., and a speed boat regatta, at Long Beach, Calif.

"Fighter Pilot" is a splendid bit of entertainment, having to do with the alert Royal Air Force. This is the real stuff with actual fighting scenes.

Betty Wasson, who broadcast from Athens for the Columbia Broadcasting System, remained in that city after the Nazi victory. She was permitted to visit the prison-camp at Corinth, and there saw not only 10,000 British prisoners but also 4,000 Italian prisoners who hadn't been released. She broadcast this story from Athens, but her talk wasn't heard here because she miscalculated the program schedule, having forgotten about the hour's difference in Daylight Saving Time.

Miss Wasson then was sent to Berlin, where she was detained at the Hotel Adlin. There she saw and spoke with P. G. Wodehouse. His broadcast to America was not written by any Nazi official, but by Flannery who interviewed him first, then put him on the air . . . The suggestion for the Wodehouse broadcast, however, came from a Nazi official . . . Wodehouse told Miss Wasson that he is being paid for his broadcasts—that the Nazis are supplying him not only with food and a suite at the Adlon, but also with money. In addition, he receives money from England—via the American Embassy. And it was to Betty Wasson when she asked him: "How do you think England feels about your broadcast?" that Wodehouse said "The England I knew will never be the same."

CARMEN MIRANDA

These master minds who always are bragging about what they could do with this industry! None of them ever stops to think that pictures aren't like any other business on earth. The commodity the producer has to sell is people, and high strung, temperamental people, too, and lots of them. Who ever heard of an automobile lying back on its haunches and saying, "I won't run for that old Grotox hag! I detest fat women and anyhow she drives like a nit-wit. I should risk my fenders with THAT one!"

But that's what you're up against in this business, and how! The producer not only has to sell his story and actors to the public; he's got to sell the story to the actors, the actors to the writers and both to the director and all of them have to be satisfied. A lot of what goes on in this business is goofy, but so would you be if you were up against the producers' job.

Wales Moves to Hollywood For Film of Mining Village

By Charles R. Moore

Cerrig Ceinnen, Calif., Aug. 3 (U.P.)—Here, some 50 miles from Hollywood, the moving picture people have constructed a small corner of Wales.

It was built from photographs of a village which since has been bombed to pieces and is so authentic that the real Welsh actors get homesick.

Darryl F. Zanuck, producing "How Green Was My Valley," for Twentieth Century-Fox, spent more than $100,000 building it and estimates it will cost a like amount to tear it down and make a respectable cow pasture of it again.

That is one of the headaches involved in making pictures on somebody else's cow pasture. You not only have to build your set but you have to tear it down again and put things into such shape that the cows will never know you've been there.

The mining village of Cerrig Ceinnen, Glamorgan, Wales, has been simulated along the edge of the San Fernando Valley. It is a spot no movie camera has poked into before, although many an Indian-bit-the-dust melodrama has been filmed in the area around Calabasas, a few miles away.

That Welsh Ale Lacking

Cerrig Ceinnen is located atop a hill, its main street running up to the coal mine which furnishes employment, part of the time, for the village's residents.

To this village Director John Ford each morning leads an expedition of about 300 people, including 70 Welsh singing actors. They spend the day at work there, then trek back to Hollywood by bus in the evening.

There is a stone chapel, a row of stone cottages, shops and four taverns. Coal mining, even for the movies, is a thirsty business. Posters advertised some 20 brands of Welsh ale but all anyone could actually buy was soda pop.

The chapel, in the shade of a large oak tree, dominates the central part of the village.

Director Ford said it was the only part of the set with which he was not completely satisfied.

"That oak tree," he said, "is too perfect. No one will believe it is real, and not just put there by the prop department."

Today Ford was shooting at the pit head.

Singing Adds Emotional Touch

Their women watch silently for a time, then burst into an emotional Welsh anthem. The men join them as they walk toward their homes, the procession dwindling as one after the other turns into his yard.

Soon only a handful remain, singing as they disappear toward their homes.

This singing is one of the most unusual features in this film version of Richard Llewellyn's book. More than once, when the Welsh players finish a folk song, the usually blase technical crew has broken into spontaneous applause.

Ford has a personal knowledge of this section of Wales. He once traveled through the mining area involved, on foot, unaware that he was to direct a picture about these same people.

He said one of the most moving experiences of his life was hearing a crowd of 5,000 unemployed miners, as Welsh Writer Tdris Davies described them:

"Come with their fathers' songs
"Out of the derelict lands,
"Come to the gates of London,
"Begging with broken hands."

That is the sort of thing they are doing here. Sometimes this make-believe gets pretty serious.

Racing Season Draws Society to Saratoga

Hotels and Cottage Colony Are Filled As Followers of the Sport of Kings Double Town's 15,000 Population

Saratoga was once an Indian village, but one would never guess it now.

So numerous are New Yorkers at this famous spa and horse racing resort in August that a more likely conclusion would be that it was handed down from the same hardy gentry who colonized Manhattan Island.

Its population is normally no more than 15,000. Yet in the heyday of August, the number of residents is more than doubled by the influx of members of society, racing men and their assistants.

This amazing spa, under State jurisdiction, is just as exciting as any European spa ever [illegible] Saratoga. Its Association for the Improvement of the Breed of Horses remade its grounds for the parimutuels without destroying their charm. The flower boxes are filled with blooms, the infield is even more attractive than usual with shrubs, new entrances and driveways, and in the paddock owners and their friends may admire horses beneath century old trees.

All the many old-fashioned hotels in Saratgo—famous for their wide piazzas and rocking chairs—are filled with visitors. The Gideon-Putnam and the United States are jammed to capacity, and so are the houses in the cottage colony.

Yearling Sales Start Tonight

Every night is gay. Starting tonight, there are the yearling sales, at which smart women in satins and furs and men in black ties will gather. Many of them will have been up since dawn, when they arrived at the track to watch their favorites work out.

In addition, two dinner dances have been planned at the Piping Rock Club, one on Thursday for the benefit of the Saratoga Golf Club, of which George Bull is president, and the other on August 14, to aid the Saratoga Hospital and Bundles for Britain. Mrs. Sydney J. Smith is chairman of the latter benefit.

John Hay Whitney, who works for the Rockefeller committee, has arrived at the resort. His estate here is one of the most attractive in Saratoga. With Mr. Whitney are Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Hitchcock jr., Mr. and Mrs. Richard Myers, Mrs. Elizabeth Cushing Roosevelt and William Jackson. Mrs. Roosevelt is the former wife of James Roosevelt, oldest son of the President, and has many friends in Washington, where she has frequently visited.

Mrs. Dodge Sloane, who has a home in the Virginia hunting country, is a recent arrival at the spa. She entertained at luncheon recently at the clubhouse near the race track.

Mrs. Robert Livingston Clarkson, sister of Mrs. George A. Garrett, of Washington, is at Saratoga for the season. She is accompanied by her son, Robert L. Clarkson, jr. Mr. and Mrs. Garrett visited the Clarksons earlier in the season at their home on Long Island.

Others who are frequently seen at the track include Mr. and Mrs. James Butler, jr., Alfred G. Vanderbilt, president of the Westchester Racing Association; Mr. and Mrs. Arthur White, of Middleburg; Mr. and Mrs. Walter J. Salmon and Miss Beatrice MacGuire.

Notes From Hot Springs And Southampton

Other resort notes: Senora de Espil, wife of the Argentine Ambassador, was among the guests at a dinner given Saturday night by Mrs. Parmely W. Herrick, formerly of Washington, now of New York. Others in the party were the Italian Ambassador and Donna Colonna, Prince and Princess Pignatelli and Mrs. John White Geary.

Mr. and Mrs. Ernest C. Wagner—she's the sister of Mrs. George T. Pettingill, of Washington—gave a dinner over the weekend for Lady Howard de Walden, mother of the Hon. Mrs. Heathcote-Ampry, of the British Embassy in Washington.

Stewart MacDonald, former Federal Housing administrator, is at Southampton. He was among the guests at a dinner given on Friday evening by Mrs. Natalie Johnson Van Vleck, who entertained at the Meadow Club. Among the other guests were Mr. and Mrs. Jeremiah D. Maguire, Mr. and Mrs. Douglas Findlay and Mr. and Mrs. William M. Greve.

Luther N. Hughes, Bride on Auto Trip

Mr. and Mrs. Luther N. Hughes, who were married July 30, are now on a motor trip through Pennsylvania and Ohio. Their marriage took place in the chaplain's reception room at Fort Belvoir, where the bridegroom is stationed.

The bride is the former Miss Virginia Cooper, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Cooper, of Davis, W. Va., and Mr. Hughes is the son of Mrs. Ida Hughes of that place. At her wedding she wore a gown of white taffeta with a flowing skirt of mousseline and carried an old fashioned bouquet of white gladioli. Mrs. M. L. Cooper, her sister-in-law, was matron of honor, wearing tea rose crepe with a corsage of talisman roses. The bride's brother, M. L. Cooper, was best man.

A reception at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Julian Cooper, of Washington followed. The bride attended Shepherd College, West Virginia University and West Virginia School of Technology. She is a member of the Davis High School faculty and has been attending Wood College in Washington this summer.

The Armstrongs To Live in S. C.

Lieut. and Mrs. John Denithorne Armstrong, jr., who were married on Saturday in Ninety-Six, S. C., will make their home in Spartanburg, S. C. The former Miss Barbara Patricia Porter, daughter of Lieut. Col. and Mrs. Sumter Allen Porter, of Ninety-Six, and her husband are now honeymooning in the North Carolina mountains. Lieut. Armstrong is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Armstrong, of Washington.

The couple was married at the First Baptist Church, the Rev. Oswald Smith officiating, assisted by the Rev. J. E. Ledbetter. The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, wore white chiffon with lace trimming the bodice and wrists. Her veil of illusion fell from a tiara of orange blossoms and she carried a shower of white roses. Her maid of honor, Miss Margaret Taylor, wore white marquisette and carried mixed white summer flowers.

Frank Armstrong was best man for his brother and the ushers were Sumter Allen Porter, jr., and Dewey Burnett, jr., Ernest Carpenter III was ring-bearer.

A reception at the bride's home followed the ceremony. She attended Lander College, Greenwood, S. C., and Duke University. Lieut. Armstrong studied at the Washington College of Law.

Anne Halsey Engaged to Wed Lieut. Roberts

Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Schuyler Halsey, of Grey Towers, Irvington-on-Hudson, have announced the engagement of their daughter, Miss Anne Sherman Halsey, to Lieut. Charles Shepherd Roberts, United States Marine Corps Reserve, son of Mr. and Mrs. Shepherd M. Roberts, of Winnetka, Ill.

Miss Halsey attended the Convent of the Holy Child, Suffern, N. Y., and was graduated from the Kent Place School, Pine Manor Junior College, and Barnard College.

Lieut. Roberts was graduated from Lake Forest Academy and in 1939 from Princeton University, where he was a member of the Cottage Club. He later studied at the Harvard Graduate School of Business Administration and is now on active duty with the Marine Corps. He is stationed at Quantico, Va.

Wyoming Society Will Go on Cruise

Many persons of national importance are expected on the Potomac cruise aboard the S. S. Mount Vernon to be held Thursday evening under the auspices of the Wyoming State Society.

Among the Wyoming notables will be Senator and Mrs. Joseph C. O'Mahoney, Senator and Mrs. Harry H. Schwartz, Representative and Mrs. John J. McIntyre, Mrs. Nellie Tayloe Ross, the Assitant Attorney General and Mrs. Thurman Arnold and Mr. and Mrs. Claude L. Draper. Rear Admiral Emery S. Land, retiring president of the society, is also expected.

At a recent election of officers, A. W. Dickinson of the American Mining Congress, formerly of Rock Springs, Wyo., was chosen president to succeed Admiral Land. Other officers elected were Commander B. A. Thompson, Miss Irene Long, J. Kirk Baldwin and Mrs. Margaret Vendell.

Of Interest to Society Winship Assignment

Of much interest to society here is the news that North Winship has been assigned as American Consul General in Toronto, Canada.

Mr. Winship formerly served as Counselor of the American Legation at Pretoria, South Africa. He and Mrs. Winship arrived in Washington early in the summer and, after several weeks at a hotel here, took a house.

Thomas Moorhead Goes To California on Visit

Thomas Moorhead has gone to California with his mother and will spend some time in San Francisco with his brother, Harry Moorhead.

Their Wedding an Event of Saturday

Harris & Ewing.

MR. AND MRS. LAURENCE KNAPP are caught by the cameraman as they leave All Souls' Unitarian Church following their wedding there at noon on Saturday. She is the former Marquise Kortryc d'Albizzi, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Godfrey S. Collier, of Cardiff, Wales. After a honeymoon on the West Coast the couple will return here to make their home in Georgetown

George Garretts Honored at Dinner In Southampton

Mr. and Mrs. George A. Garrett, who have been traveling through New England, spent the weekend in Southampton as guests of Mr. and Mrs. H. Nelson Slater, who entertained at a dinner in their honor.

Others at the dinner were Archduke Otto of Austria and his brother, Archduke Felix, who arrived on Friday to visit Prince and Princess Francis J. M. Windisch-Graetz at Rosemore, the house they have leased at the Long Island resort.

Mr. and Mrs. Garrett were in Southampton earlier in the season to spend a weekend with Mr. and Mrs. Dwight Davis.

Committee Formed To Sponsor Opera

Supreme Court Justice and Mrs. Stanley Reed are among prominent Washington residents who are interested in the appearance in the Capital of the San Carlo Opera Company in the first season of summer opera that this city has had, beginning Wednesday, August 13, and continuing through August 19 at the Watergate.

Others who have accepted the invitation to appear on the District of Columbia committee for this festival, which is headed by Mrs. Franklin Delano Roosevelt, are:

Undersecretary of State and Mrs. Sumner Welles, Undersecretary of Commerce and Mrs. Wayne Chatfield-Taylor, Special Assistant to the Secretary of State and Mrs. James Clement Dunn, Mrs. Charles Dewey, Mr. and Mrs. Adolph Caspar Miller, Admiral and Mrs. George Pettingill, Mrs. Francis Biddle, Mrs. Edwin M. Watson, Mrs. Daniel C. Roper, Dr. and Mrs. Stanley Hornbeck, and Mr. and Mrs. Jay Franklin Carter.

The San Carlo Opera Company, with Fortune Gallo, impresario, is a nonprofit-making organization with a membership association like that maintained by the Metropolitan Opera Company of New York and the Chicago Opera Company, Chicago, Ill. Mr. Gallo recently has accepted the managership for the Chicago Opera Company also.

Eight operas will be presented in seven evenings at the Watergate and two of the performances will be given in English. "La Traviata," by Verdi, is the opening opera, August 13. The others, appearing on succeeding evenings include: "Madame Butterfly" (in English); "Aida," "Carmen," "Martha" (in English); "Il Trovatore," and, on the final evening, the combination bill of two short operas, "Cavalleria Rusticana" and "I Pagliacci," concluding the festival August 19.

Brazilian Envoy, Wife In Pocono Mountains

About the Town

—with Dudley Harmon

ANYONE WHO'S read a certain picture magazine or tried to get a taxi late in the afternoon knows that Washington is a Boom Town. Daily hundreds come here from all over the United States, to work as dollar a year men, or as a file clerk, for National Defense. We cornered two newcomers who have important official positions here and asked them their impressions of Washington. Here are the results:

If you spend the summer in Washington, the only way to be happy is to become reconciled to staying at home. I have found one of the best ways to keep cool is to stay on the floor, literally. Why go 100 miles to find jelly fish and luke warm water?

A man I knew worked in the Federal Housing Department for three years and when he resigned he went in person to collect his check. Although he had received pay for three years regularly, when he appeared in person, no one ever heard of him and it took three weeks to find someone who had ever seen him before and would acknowledge him as a government employe.

When you taxi home, don't say more than one sentence to your companion when you leave her. Otherwise it costs an extra ten cents.

A man I know is paid on a dollar a year basis, but as he only comes to Washington for consultation for two days a week he has figured that the annual check will be exactly 28.6 cents.

I think Washington is a wonderful place. You meet such interesting people and hear such wonderful stories. Here are few I have heard from men in OPM: One of the highest officials in OPM has not gotten his mail for six weeks because he has no desk on which it can be delivered. The only way he receives any mail is to have it delivered to friends who know where his chair is and they bring it around when they have time to drop in. Another man in OPM ordered three typewriter ribbons, and it took two weeks to have the requisition approved. However, when the delivery was made, it turned out to be three $144 typewriters! In the end he had to keep them for the ribbons because there is no bureau in the government by which things can be returned and, anyway, he could not get a requisition for the 35-cent ribbons in any other way.

A man in charge of personnel in OPM had to go to the Kentucky mountains in order to get typists who didn't know that Government regulations allowed them to leave at quarter of five. One night when he had a rush job to do, 19 of his 20 stenographers agreed to stay and see that the important job was done. The twentieth (the only regular Civil Service worker) was willing to return in three hours, after she had cooked her husband's dinner and done the dishes.

THE THING I like about Washington is that everybody is so hospitable. The shop-keepers are so agreeable that you can't spend your money, and there is nowhere to go over the weekends. But anybody you call up urges you to come and stay for days. We are planning to go to Virginia Beach either next weekend or the weekend after that.

We understand that some of the residents of Washington have been complaining about the heat lately. Let me tell you that you haven't really seen anything yet. I have just come from the great state of Missouri, where it has been at least 90 for over a month and over a hundred for the last four days.

Since coming to Washington, many people have asked me about the sentiments of the Middle West with regards to the war in Europe, apparently thinking that we are all isolationists. This, of course, is not so. As a matter of fact, I believe that people in the Middle West feel much the same as the people in the East. There are a good many people on the interventionist side in both areas.

Jane Hutton Bride Of P. W. Baker

Announcement has been made of the marriage of Miss Jane Ann Hutton, daughter of Mrs. Bedford Forrest Hutton and the late Mr. Hutton, to Perry William Baker, son of Mr. and Mrs. William L. Baker, of Alderson, W. Va. The ceremony took place July 19 at Takoma Park Presbyterian Church, Takoma Park, Md.

The bride was given in marriage by her brother, Elihus B. Hutton. Mrs. Ralph G. Dillard, her sister, was her only attendant. Following the ceremony a reception was held at the Dillard home in Silver Spring.

The Misses Bailey Have Guests at Eagles Mere

The Misses Patricia and Katherine Bailey of Washington, who are at The Lakeside, Eagles Mere, Pa., entertained a party of friends there over the weekend. Their guests included Miss Eleanor Ketner and Alan J. Bell of this city.

Other recent arrivals at the Lakeside are Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Van der Veer of Washington.

Mrs. Berle Returns From Berkshire Holiday

Mrs. Adolf A. Berle, wife of the Assistant Secretary of State, has joined her husband at their home on Nebraska Avenue after a vacation at their home in the Berkshires.

Mrs. Berle will return to their summer home the middle of the week.

At Martinique

Mrs. Arthur White, wife of Col. White, is here from Brownwood, Tex., and is at the Martinique.

Mrs. Townsend Returns to D. C.

Mrs. Emngham Townsend has returned from a month at Northern resorts. With Mrs. Martin Vogel, whose son, Martin, jr., married Mrs. Townsend's daughter, Peggy, she spent several weeks at the Wianno Club.

Mrs. Vogel also is back in Washington, supervising painters and carpenters preparing the house at 2800 Wodland Drive for occupancy. Mrs. Vogel has leased this residence from Representative and Mrs. James W. Wadsworth, and will occupy it with her niece, Baroness Stackelberg, and Baron Stackelberg.

Mrs. Townsend and Mrs. Vogel also visited Mr. and Mrs. Martin Vogel, jr., who have taken a house at Sands Point, Long Island, for the summer. The young Vogels spent the past weekend attending the horse show at Spring Lake, N. J.

Hartford Man Weds D. C. Girl

The wedding of Miss Evelyn Braverman, daughter of Mrs. Sarah Beaverman, of the Shoreham Hotel, and the late Max Elihu Braverman, of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, to Albert M. Herrup, son of Mrs. E. M. Herrup and the late Louis Herrup, of West Hartford, Conn., took place yesterday at the Hotel Plaza, New York City. Dr. Jonah B. Wise performed the ceremony.

The bride attended Dana Hall, Wellesley, Mass., and has recently been doing research work with the Committee for Selected Social Studies in cooperation with Columbia University.

Mr. Herrup attended the Stearns School and is a graduate of the University of Pennsylvania. After a wedding trip, Mr. and Mrs. Herrup will live in West Hartford, Conn.

Many From Here Are at Cape May

Comdr. and Mrs. J. E. Hamilton and their daughter, Peggy, are spending some time at the Admiral in Cape May.

Other Washington residents at the Admiral who expect to stay through August include: Lieut. Comdr. and Mrs. P. W. Snyder, Capt. and Mrs. J. R. Hornberger, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Lund, E. N. Toland, Miss Mary Burke, Mr. and Mrs. George W. Neville, Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Bassett, Dr. and Mrs. J. E. Bohen, jr., Miss Edwina Atkinson, Miss Marjorie Erickson, Miss Tracy Thomas and Mr. and Mrs. R. P. Wilson.

Princess Martha Fetes Prince Carl in New York

Crown Princess Martha of Norway entertained at a luncheon in New York over the weekend in honor of her brother, Prince Carl. The party took place at the Waldorf-Astoria.

Prince Carl arrived in New York on Friday on the liner West Point. He was accompanied on his trip by Frederick Sterling, United States Minister to Sweden. Prince Carl plans to spend several weeks in this country and will visit his sister, Crown Princess Martha, at her summer home at Salters Point, Mass.

The Gentler Sex

By Malvina Lindsay

When It's a Man's World

I

How very nice to be a man,
During the summer dog days span!
Not to care about a permanent's sagging,
Ner the beauty editors' constant nagging
To douse on cologne and other potions,
That will give your beau romantic notions;
And when heat and humidity both annoy,
To keep as alluring as Helen of Troy.

II

How very simple to be a male,
When the rays of the August sun assail,
And not have to wear a girdle of rubber,
But just go around like a shapeless lubber;
And have a face that is frankly shiny,
(And even at times a little briny)
And not to bathroom laundry work to be oared,

III

How very pleasant to give no thought,
As to how three daily meals can be wrought
Of "light, tempting" foods and cooling drinks,
(Which leave dishes piled sky high in sinks)
And to have no qualms when vacationists come,
But to greet them with hospitable aplomb,
And not have to fix the lemonade,

IV

Oh, what a cinch to be a fellow,
When the summer sun gets ripe and mellow!
And from no morning bed arise,
To improve the figure by exercise;
And to go to the beach and at others gape
Unaware of defects in one's own shape;
And at end of day to appear a fright
And imagine one's self a pleasing sight.

V

But best of all in the summer lag
Is being able to bullyrag:
And when nerves get taut, to stomp and roar,
And to turn one's back on every bore;
And to slough off blithely all chores that fetter,
And not have to answer any letter;
Neither family nor neighbors to appease
But merely to do as you darn please.

Nail Polish Problem for Girls May Be Solved By Giving Them Quiz on Hand Grooming

If she's begging to wear polish, it's high time to give her a manicure set of her very own. She'll take real pride in her hands and nails, keep them nicely groomed but free from bright polish. The 12-year-old miss above smiles proudly over her new nail kit that is complete with hand cream, nail shampoo, orange stick, emery board and cuticle oil

By Carolyn Abbott.

AT WHAT AGE should a young girl start using fingernail polish? This moot question often causes turbulent scenes between mothers and small daughters. Sometimes the argument continues for two or three years.

To settle the dispute I posed the question to local beauty experts, coworkers, friends and strangers. Here's a gist of their opinions.

A world-traveled woman, who heads a well-known beauty salon here says, "As soon as a girl dons her first long party dress, she should be permitted to wear fingernail polish. This might come at the age of 14 or 17. But she should be guided into choosing a shade that is in keeping with her age and type."

When approached on the subject, one of my coworkers, an outstanding columnist of the Woman's Page, who deals in problems of emotions and conduct, expressed her opinion thus: "Once the girl passes from the intangible period of adolescence to young womanhood, she is then ready to brighten her fingernails for social occasions. All depends upon her maturity rather than her chronological age. Before the girl reaches the partying stage, she might be encouraged to dabble with polish so as to establish good grooming habits. Even a child of 10 might be given a bottle of polish, provided the youngster understands that it is in play, not in seriousness."

Society Girl's View

"Keep polish from a girl entering high school and you break her heart," commented a vivacious young society girl with a very level head. "If her friends use bright fingernail polish, she'll feel like an outcast if her nails are unpolished. In many cases a little bright polish on the teen ager's nails cures her of biting them and establishes a consciousness of good grooming early in life."

The consensus of opinion of others questioned on the subject reveals that 16 is the accepted age for bright polishes. However, all agree that the child of 7 or younger should be taught and encouraged to give herself manicures (minus vivid polish shades).

Regardless of age—be it 6 or 17—when the young daughter of the house first takes to playing grown-up, smearing your dark polish on her nails or imitating some beauteous movie star, get her a manicure set of her own. She'll find that fussing with her nails is so much fun, you'll have her started right in nail caring ways before you know it. Then, too, she'll be so intrigued with her own possessions that you can easily dissuade her from dark polishes or the bright, light ones.

A new child's manicure set called "Your Very Own" has everything a young girl should use. It has a creamy nail shampoo that chases stains and grime, makes quick work of dingy mudpie look. Also, there's a powder polish and buffer to cultivate a demure shine. Then there's a tube of hand cream, for that "grown-up touch" and all the "fixings" to take care of cuticles.

A Finger-Nail Quiz

How about giving your daughter a nail quiz so she can play Information Please? She'll love making a game of it to see if her score is really tops. Also, it will discourage polish for awhile and at the same time establish a desire for well groomed hands and nails.

Here's a quiz for children and older women too. Get the young daughter to try it. Best score is 70, counting 10 for each question answered yes.

1—Do you push cuticle back carefully twice a week at least—and always use oil to soften it first? (Five points for each part.)

2—Do you shape your nails (in ovals, please) with an emery board?

3—Do you buff nails each week, 10 strokes to a nail? Buff in one direction only to avoid burning.

4—Can you let a broken nail or hangnail severely alone—until you get back home where you can snip it off? (Never cut cuticle—that causes more hangnails.)

5—Do you scrub hands and fingertips at least twice a day—and use nail white once or twice a week to keep your nails speckless?

6—What about hard spots at the nail corners? You won't have them if you don't dig down at the corners. To banish them rub in cuticle oil once a day.

7—Is there a sixteenth of an inch of nice white tip around each nail? You'll have to cut out all biting and keep your hands and nails clean.

When the young daughter scores 70 and if she's of age, she's about ready to graduate into the big-girl class. No wearing of colored polish until her score is perfect.

Mary Haworth's Mail

Wife Asks How to Overcome Husband's 'Antisocial' Habits of Talking Little, Ignoring Visitors, Refusing Invitations? He Is 'Good' to Her; 'Grand' to Sons

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Briefly, my problem is this: How to overcome certain antisocial tendencies in my husband. I will characterizes him as best I can. He is quiet, and while he reads everything of a topical interest, he will discuss none of it. Both of us are college graduates and you would think he might digest what he reads, and be a most interesting conversationalist. But he remains indifferent to what I would consider the most provocative topics, including sports, politics, social problems, etc.

He doesn't like company. He will not go anywhere. He turns a deaf ear to plans for picnics, church suppers, card parties, visits, etc. He is rude to callers. What I mean is, he greets them heartily enough, but he will not enter into the conversation. He stretches full length on the couch and reads. Most of my friends tell me, comfortingly, that there are worse husbands than he; and I ought to be glad he is sober! (That sounds as if I talk him over a lot with my friends, which I don't; and neither are my friends hard drinkers!)

I do want to say that he is grand to our two sons and plays with them as though he were a child himself. And he is good to me. While he will not accompany me anywhere, he is generous with the car and allows me to go wherever I wish, without question. I hope this gives you an adequate picture of his behavior. And now, can you please tell me how to persuade him to be more sociable? MARIAN V.

'Men of Few Words Are the Best Men'

DEAR MARIAN V.: My observation of human nature, to date, inclines me to believe, with Shakespeare, that, "Men of few words are the best men." There is basic poise—the implication of power on leash—in the personality of the man who can amiably hold his peace, while those about him are tensely engaged in time-killing discussion. As compared with the average glib "conversationalist"—always ready with an opinion on any subject, and, indeed, eager to be heard—the pleasantly self-contained man appears to restful advantage. And I daresay if the intrinsic worth of each could be weighed and measured, the "man of few words" would be found (in most instances) to be the more dependable associate—having a more benevolent, more discerning and more resourceful character than his fluently opinionated brother.

Also with regard to your husband's disinterest in "company," I submit that I am sympathetic to the attitude. I think a higher, more sensitive intelligence is indicated by a preference for quietude and some margin of insulation against willy-nilly contact with other personalities, than is exemplified by the desire to go visiting and have visitors; and to be constantly agitating the surface of one's life with such "sociable" activities as picnicking, partying, supping, card playing, etc., en masse.

However, one cannot excuse your husband's bland bad manners in sprawling at full length on a couch to read, in the presence of guests whom he has just greeted. Such conduct imposes too much of a strain upon you to be readily forgiven. If he is allergic to "dropper-inners," he has a right to protect himself against that social irritant, but he should not nurse his idiosyncracies at the expense of giving crude offense to the feelings of others.

When he has joined you in greeting guests who would, as the feminine saying goes, "bore him to 'ears,' he may properly and politely absent himself from the group, with appropriate excuses, after an interval,—but he cannot behave in the oafish manner described without classifying himself as being more insufferable than even the most exasperatingly tedious of uninvited visitors. If his reading is not to be interrupted, or if he feels a need to relax on his spine, he should retire behind closed doors,—perhaps to the room where he sleeps, —to indulge his choice.

Now, with regard to your ambition to make him "more sociable," my advice to you is to let him alone. Which is the equivalent of advising you to show him the same (or as much) consideration as he shows you, by and large —in letting you have the car when you please, to go where you like, without question. Since your tastes in social matters are so markedly different, you can only live together in harmony by taking that difference in stride. Can't you see that it would be as insidiously tyrannical and trouble making of you to try to pattern him to your social likeness, as it would be of him to try to coerce you into a sit-by-the-fireside performance?

It is your lack of sensitive, humorous appreciation of those qualities in your husband's nature which make him lofitly indifferent to the society of miscellaneous ecquaintances, that renders you incapable of modifying his attitudes by the use of intuitive diplomacy. If you were psychologically more en rapport with him, you might (as the phrase goes) "do more with him." Most persons respond readily to the influence of those who give evidence of sympathetically understanding and warmly indorsing their salient characteristics.

But it so happens that you belong, by temperament, more with "the herd" than with the peace and quiet loving caste of humankind to which your husband belongs. Which means that you don't speak his language, of mind and spirit, sufficiently to interest him in either swapping points of view with you or joining your social excursions. And since your friends (or boon companions) would be reflective of your personality, it naturally follows that he would be equally disinterested in them. But so long as he makes no quarrel with the situation—which has him behind the eight ball, as being somewhat eccentric—you should be more concerned with smoothing things over, than with stirring them up. Instead of critically analyzing him, in your thoughts or to your friends, emphasize his good points, of which he undoubtedly has many—with his "grand" attitude toward his children an incomparable attribute. Enduring Homes Being Built, Despite Uncertainty of Future

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin

THE DEFENSE wheels are turning seriously these days and that means that lots more Americans are at work. The first place most people put their money, after they've bought food and clothes, is on their homes. And so more women than ever before are becoming interior decoration conscious. They know that furnishing or refurbishing a home is no job to be glib about. Letters from our readers indicate that they are taking this business seriously, that they are planning enduring homes despite the insecure world outlook today. You see, they believe in America.

Rug Problem

Mrs. C. R. S. writes: "We are moving into a colonial house. The living and dining rooms have beautiful random width hardwood floors. The living room is about 23 feet long and papered a pale green. Will you kindly advise me whether to purchase a 9 by 15 rug or scatter rugs. Also what colors?

"I have a kidney-shaped sofa and two easy chairs, and expect to purchase more. I would like to have slip covers made for the furniture, but have never seen a kidney-shaped sofa slip-covered. Do they make a satisfactory appeart andce when covered? If so, kindly advise colors for these also, as well as for rug and draperies. Would small tables at each side of the sofa be appropriate? If so, what kind?"

Tranquil Effect

Either big rugs or scatters would be appropriate in your living room. Scatter rugs would, of course, show more of the nice floor, but a big rug would give the room more of a feeling of tranquility. What about a soft-toned green twist weave broadloom, if you get a big rug. For slip covers, a chintz or cretonne with a soft green ground and a flowered design would be our choice. I have seen kidney-shaped sofas slip covered and they look all right if the job is perfectly tailored, but it's harder to do than a straight piece. This same flowered material for draperies over white organdy glass curtains would be pleasant. For accessories use wine red glass, and for lamp tables, what about the library step table? It is convenient for lamps and books, as well as for oddments.

Problem Window Has Solution

Have you a problem window in your home, one of those odd-sized ones that you can't curtain or shade in the conventional way? Anita Louise has just such an odd window in her dining room. So she had a shadow frame built all around it, a scalloped frame which makes it look like an old-fashioned cupboard. Then she had the window shelved, placed odd pieces of glass and china right in her window, which now looks like a knick-nack cupboard. The gadgets are very pretty when the light shines through them.

Good Posture a By-Product of Health

By Ida Jean Kain

NEXT THING you know we may have a national posture coordinator—someone whose job will be to perk up the civilian posture!

The idea, of course, is that health depends on good posture. But good posture also depends on health. It is not always enough to whack a person between the shoulder blades and tell him to stand up. It may not even be in order to start him on remedial exercise.

Unless there is a foundation of health, not much can be accomplished by verbal reminders and special exercise. When a person is poorly nourished and in desperate need of building up, as is often the case with poor posture, the health measures come first.

You May Need Sleep

If you are run down, you cannot "will" a good posture. It may be that you are not eating the foods that make for strength and vigor. Nutrition plays just as big a role as habit. Or, you may be trying to get by on too little sleep. Possibly you need more fresh air, more recreation and relaxation. Outdoor sports afford exercise and exhilaration, both of which impart tone to your musculature. Good muscular tone makes it more natural for you to hold yourself erect.

It is not improbable that, in addition, you need specific posture exercises. And if poor posture is a habit with you, the routine method of correction will work wonders.

First of all, you have to be posture conscious and have the desire to sit and stand correctly. Then you must be able to recognize the feel of good posture. Stand with heels a few inches away and with your back against a wall, shoulders and backs of hips touching wall, and small of back and back of the neck as flat as you can get them. Now, push off with the back of your hand and try to walk off with your body in the same alignment. That's not only a posture test, but an exercise.

The Rule Is: Up

As for rules, there is only one that's really worth your while—"up." Pull up with the top of your head, lift your chest up, and pull up with the lower abdominal muscles.

Any training should be such that you find it comfortable to maintain an erect posture during activity of all kinds and without too much conscious effort. But if you simply lack the energy to hold yourself correctly, your health habits need checking.

Pilgrim Furniture Was Practical

Those indomitable New Englanders not only established a colony of great individuality and forthright principles but they likewise created their own vernacular in furniture. It was based on remembered English models, particularly the stern Cromwellian types of seventeenth century furniture, but, because of the grim necessities of the life they had created for themselves in the New World, their furniture was simpler, cruder than its English models, built as need arose and for specific utilitarian purposes, of the woods available and with the tools they could fashion themselves.

Martha Ellyn's Platter Chatter

Olive and Veal Gelatin Salad a Fresh Note

FRESH notes for warm weather entertaining are needed this summer in Washington. Cold dishes are usually welcome but there is a chance that gelatin salads with the same old ingredients used in them become monotonous.

If you have cooked a veal roast and there is leftover meat try making it into a Ripe Olive and Lamb Aspic Salad. Served with some green vegetables, hot baking powder biscuits, and a creamy-smooth cool refrigerator dessert, plus an iced beverage, you have a meal that is as refreshing as an afternoon shower.

Ripe olives will add much to the meatiness of this dish, especially if cut in generous slices from the pits of whole ripe olives. Make the salad this way:

Olive and Lamb Aspic Salad

Soften 1 tablespoon gelatin in ¼ cup cold water, adding 1 cup boiling water and stir to dissolve gelatin. Add 1 tablespoon vinegar, ¼ teaspoon salt, ¼ teaspoon pepper, ⅛ teaspoon paprika and 1 teaspoon Worcestershire sauce and blend. Pour into a wet mold and let stand until firm, or mold in individual molds. Serve on lettuce with a topping of mayonnaise and a sprinkling of paprika. Serves 4 to 6.

THE REASONS

The two main reasons for wrong numbers are calling from memory and hurried dialing. It's a simple matter to overcome these faults.

THE REMEDIES

1. MAKE CERTAIN of the number you want by consulting the directory before calling.

2. Always listen for the DIAL TONE. The apparatus cannot handle your call until you hear it.

3. Take your time. DIAL CAREFULLY. A few seconds more may save you minutes and prevent the irritation of a wrong number.

4. Turn the dial to the finger stop each time and let it return naturally. Do not force it back. The NATURAL unwinding of the dial operates the apparatus.

5. If you hear the BUSY SIGNAL, or if you make a mistake, hang up for a few moments and then proceed as on a new call.

Rich Letting Mansions Go For Museums

By Inez Robb
International News Service Staff Writer

New York, Aug. 3.—When society itself made the astounding discovery that all that glitters is not gold, the gilded age was done for.

The desire for a more simple, less pretentious life began the bloodless social revolution that has been subsequently shaped and immeasurably speeded in the past quarter-century, by two world wars, the depression and vastly increased taxation on inheritances and incomes. It would be a mistake to imagine that the shrinkage in fortunes alone has precipitated the change.

The sale of the Oelrichs palace in Newport to a torch singer and the disposal of the Cornelius Vanderbilt mansion in New York as a site for a Fifth Avenue business building are no more than the death rattles of an old, tired and fast-disintegrating order geared to the leisurely pace of society's horse and buggy or glittering carriage era. Society as a whole has already stripped itself for action in an age of mechanization.

Society, viewing its situation realistically, is characterized by William Averill Harriman, American Minister to London. Harriman, far more rich than most of today's scions, nonetheless realizes that after inheritance taxes are paid on his estate, his two daughters will have no vast millions to squander.

He also knows that neither Kathleen, who is with him in London, nor Mary will ever want the responsibility of the Gargantuan country place built above Tuxedo Park by his father, the late E. H. Harriman. He has already willed the mansion and 100 acres of the mountain top it occupies to the Palisades Interstate Park.

Once when the Harriman scion was asked if this country home contained 125 rooms as reported, he flushed, shook his head and said, in a deprecating voice, "Oh, no, not more than 75 to 90 at the most!"

That old-school dowager of New York and Newport, Mrs. James Laurens Van Alen, inherited the estate of her uncle, the late Frederick W. Vanderbilt, a few years ago. With all speed, she presented to the State of New York this imposing Grecian-Corinthian mansion near Hyde Park on the Hudson River.

Given to State for Museum

With a sigh of relief that this was one less white elephant on which she would have to pay taxes and upkeep, Daisy Van Alen turned over to the Commonwealth the house and its 643 acres as a public park.

The State immediately turned the house into a National Historical Museum so that future generations may see the rapidly vanishing type of fabulous estate built by the captains of industry in the era of expansion following the Civil War.

This acknowledgment on the part of New York State itself that the guilded era is so far gone that its remnants must now be preserved in museums is the ultimate confirmation of the changed social order.

Joseph E. Widener may find it wise to will his beautiful white Italian villa in Palm Beach as a museum of a vanished age to the State of Florida. His daughter, the forthright Fifi Widener Liedy Holden Wichfeld, has already informed her father that she would not have it as a precious gift.

As a matter of fact, Newport and Palm Beach are filled with mansions that will either be torn down by heirs or else wind up as museums. No one today can afford the scale of living for which such pleasure palaces were built.

Playboy on Way Out

While preserving outstanding symbols of the immediate social past, it might be well to make a wax model of the rapidly disappearing American playboy. It has been months since even Woolworth Donahue and his brother, Jimmy, have been seen in a night club.

Phil Plant, the playboy of the twenties, is dead. His contemporary, Tin-Plate Billy Leeds, lives in semiretirement and is never seen in the gay places any more.

Life is real, life is earnest today, and there are no young aspirants for the late honors of Diamond Jim Brady. There is scarcely a rich and prominent clan in America without at least one younger member in Uncle Sam's Army.

Besides the hundreds of scions, like Winthrop Rockefeller, who are in the Army, other lads are preparing for the uncertain future faced by their country.

On Long Island, there has recently been wholesale activity at the Roosevelt Field Aviation School on the part of scions who have signed up for instruction as pilots. The most recent group includes John H. and William F. Dick, sons of the late Madeleine Force Astor, Dick Fiermonte and young half-brothers of John Jacob Astor; Cornelius N. Bliss, jr., Howard F. Whitney, jr., Clarence S. Postley and Campbell Locke, jr.

In a social era which has seen the mushrooming of the 400 into a cafe society embracing anyone with money and passable table manners, anything goes—especially money! yachts, private pullmans, a half dozen great homes to the individual, club memberships, the playboy and attendant symbols of wealth in another age are passe in this.

But society itself is in no danger of disappearing. It is still hale, hearty and going strong, having simply shifted ballast and emphasis to meet new winds.

Gunman 'Just Cuts Loose' In Saloon; 3 Slain, 7 Wounded

By the Associated Press

Seattle, Aug. 3.—A gunman bent on robbery recklessly splattered a basement saloon-club with bullets just before daybreak today, leaving 3 men dead and 7 others wounded.

A sawmill worker, swinging a stool, finally stopped the wild gunfire by battering the holdup man to the floor. The captured gunman was identified as James Green, 28.

Slain were:

Monte F. Brown, 61, vice president and publisher of the Seattle Journal of Commerce; Gus Galmatos, 41, a bartender; and John Linder, a bystander in the saloon.

Two policemen summoned by a doorman were shot down, one of them badly wounded by the gunman, who twice emptied his pistol.

Green was quoted as saying while a physician was probing for a bullet in his head:

"I went to the speakeasy and there I met a man. We planned to hold the place up."

Persons who saw the shooting, however, did not see any other man with the gunman.

Green, although critically wounded, was given a 50-50 chance to recover.

What caused the gunman to open fire had not been determined. Police said he "just cut loose."

Others wounded were:

Carl Johnson, 28, shot in the chest, condition critical; Nick Galmatos, 41, bartender and brother of Gus Galmatos, neck wounds; John Nordstrom, 60, a janitor, neck wound; Horace Smith, 43, hotel night clerk, shot in the foot; Patrolman Leon L. Brown, 42, abdominal wounds, condition critical, and Patrolman Edgar E. Barren, 40, arm wound.

The doorman, Robert Doyle, told police Green came to the club shortly before 5 a. m. Before he had time to stop him, Doyle said, Green was behind the bar, pointing a pistol at the two bartenders.

"I saw a shot fired," Doyle said, "and the gun was leveled at me: I opened the door and locked it behind me, and as I ran up the steps to the street, I could see bullet holes being blasted into the wall right beside me."

Doyle located Patrolmen Brown and Barr, who crashed in the door, only to be met by more bullets.

Brown fell, wounded, but continued firing. Barr, struck in the arm, went for reinforcements. The gunman ran to a lavatory, reloaded his gun and returned.

Then Berger Fosdal, a sawmill worker, seized a stool and slammed it down on the gunman's head. He told officers he hit the man four or five times, splintering the stool, before the gunman, on the floor, begged him:

"Don't hit me again. You've hit me enough."

Gov. Price Finds a Minister And Takes Charge of Wedding

By the Associated Press

Goshen Pass, Va., Aug. 3.—Virginia Gov. James H. Price pinch hit for Cupid today, and the little fellow with the bow and arrow couldn't have done a better job himself.

It happened as the obliging chief executive was attending the annual meeting of the Blue Grass Trail Association in this scenic mountain gorge.

A man approached him and asked if he knew where a minister could be found for a wedding, explaining that he and his girl had just secured a license at the clerk's office.

From there on out, the Governor took things in his own hands.

He ushered the couple into his executive car, ordered the driver to proceed to the trail meeting, and behind motorcycle escort the "wedding party" proceeded to Maury Rock in the pass.

There, Gov. Price got hold of the Rev. Holmes Ralston, pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Rockbridge Baths, and gathered the group about the monument to Commodore Matthew Fontaine Maury.

The Governor stood with the couple as best man and persuaded Mayors Frank Wheeler of Clifton Forge and Alfred Griffith of Buena Vista to be the witnesses.

In a few moments, John Everett Snead and Lillian Mae Lackey, both of Glasgow, were man and wife.

Portsmouth Girl Reported Missing Since July 22

Portsmouth, Va., Aug. 3 (AP).—Edythe Witkin, 17, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph B. Witkin, of this city, employed in Norfolk, has been missing since July 22 and her family has been without word from the girl since that time. Police have been asked to try and locate her.

On the afternoon of July 22 the girl sent a telegram to her mother informing her that she would have dinner and go dancing with a friend and would be home around 1 a. m. The girl was seen at the dance at Virginia Beach that night, but since then nothing has been heard from her.

The girl is described as 5 feet 7, about 140 pounds, with dark brown hair, brown eyes, and when last seen was wearing sandals, light green print dress with a sailor collar. She sometimes wears glasses with pink bone rim.

Army Officer Slays His Wife And Wounds Self

Brownwood, Tex., Aug. 3 (INS).—Capt. Harlin H. Blackmon, 30, of Fort Worth, was in a critical condition tonight and his 25-year-old wife, Helen, was dead of bullet wounds as the tragic climax of an outing of Army officers at Lake Brownwood State Park.

Half a dozen persons who witnessed the shooting told Sheriff Earl Stewart that Capt. Blackmon shot his wife in the back of the neck with a .25 automatic pistol, and then fired the gun twice into his chest.

The officers, attached to the 111th Medical Regiment at Camp Bowie, were attending a party at a fisherman's lodge when Capt. Blackmon apparently went berserk, witnesses said. Husband and wife had not quarreled, it was stated, and authorities were not able to learn immediately a motive for the shooting.

George Ditmar Wins 'Tourney' At Westminster

Westminster, Md., Aug. 2 (AP).—George Ditmar, of Smallwood, Md., won the right to crown Miss Elizabeth Lange of Baltimore queen at the sixty-seventh annual Dutch picnic here today by making a perfect score in the traditional riding, Lange tourney.

Raymond Owings of near Smallwood missed only one ring to place second. He crowned the maid of honor, Miss Beverly Chew. Third in the tourney was the only girl entry, Doris Owings, daughter of Raymond Owings.

More than 8,000 persons attended the picnic, oldest in this section of Maryland, on the grounds of the Old Trinity Lutheran Church near Smallwood.

Retired Workman Vexed By Neighborly Stork

Pursley, W. Va., Aug. 3 (AP).—Tom Everly, retired pipeline employe, reported today a large stork has been flying around his home, and Everly is getting vexed.

"I don't like to have it hanging around," Everly commented, "but I'm not sure that the conservation authorities would approve if I shot it."

Wire-Tapping Urged To Combat Saboteurs

By the Associated Press

A Senate Interstate Commerce subcommittee recommended Saturday that the Federal Bureau of investigation be permitted to tap wires in sabotage and espionage cases upon authorization by the Attorney General.

The report said that "except for the emergency" it was quite possible that a majority of the subcommittee would have opposed relaxation of wire-tapping regulations to permit even the FBI to tap wires.

Snake Spoils Wading

Fredericksburg, Va., Aug. 2.—The children of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Pierro, of nearby Stafford County, are seeking a new stream in which to wade after they discovered a 40-inch water moccasin in a rut on the Pierro farm yesterday. The snake was killed by Pierro.

Henry F. Niedringhaus, Ex-Congressman, Dies

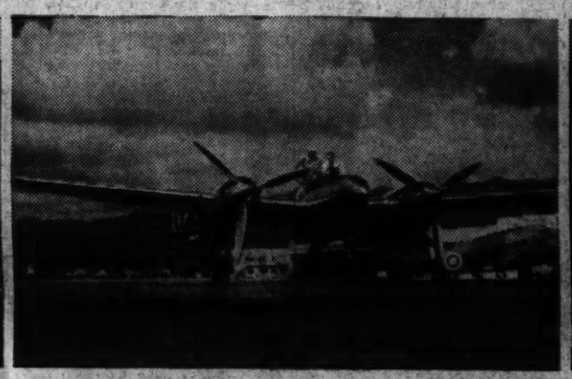
SIX, SEVEN MILES UP! In air no man can breathe—and live! Motors—now even pilots are "super-charged." On the stationary bicycle (above) Marshall Headle, chief test pilot of Lockheed, breathes pure oxygen for 30 minutes before a test flight in Lockheed's new interceptor—one of America's newest high-altitude fighters.



SHE CLIMBS A MILE A MINUTE—dives at speeds which are Army secrets. They call her "Lightning." Test pilot Headle clambers into the cockpit, switches from a pocket oxygen flask to his cabin supply, and streaks for the stratosphere. He's test-flown 300 different planes. But when he lands, it's always..."Now for a Camel."

YOU CAN'T SEE HIM up there. You can scarcely hear the hum of his motors. Then his voice comes into the radio tower: "Headle—35,000 feet—diving now." And as he comes plummeting down in that shrieking power-dive, you just hope! Seconds later—yes, seconds—he's landing. And here he is (above) cool, calm, lighting up a Camel.

"Less nicotine in the smoke means more mildness to me," says test pilot Marshall Headle (above), as he lights up his... and America's... favorite cigarette

THERE may be little traffic at 35,000 feet, but test-diving any new, untried plane is no Sunday joy-ride. No, not even for a veteran like Marshall Headle (above).

Naturally, cigarette mildness is important to Marshall Headle. And in the slower-burning cigarette of costlier tobaccos... Camels... he gets extra mildness—with less nicotine in the smoke.

What cigarette are you smoking now? Chances are it's one of the five included in the nicotine tests reported above at the left—tests which trace Camel's advantage right down to the actual smoke itself. Obviously, the smoke's the thing!

Try Camels the next time you buy. Dealers feature Camels by the carton. For convenience—economy—buy the carton.

Songs Raise Discord

West Orange, N. J., Aug. 3 (A.P.)—Charles L. Neill, director of public affairs, has ordered the town's garbage collectors to cease singing in the streets between midnight and 6 a. m. Francis M. Byrne, public safety director, said one baffled husband complained "These garbage men wake up my wife and that makes it bad when I try to tiptoe in."

It's Not Litter-ature

The Defense Council Information Booth on Post Square has free literature for those who ask for it. There are pamphlets telling "What to See" in the Nation's Capital. Entertainment schedules are also available. Yesterday attendants offered proof that such printed information hasn't been wasted. Said one: "We haven't found a single discarded piece on the sidewalk."

The Federal Diary

By Jerry Klutz

Paper Shortage to Cut U. S. Press Releases

One of the results of the defense program, beneficial or damaging, depending on how you feel, is the fact that there will be fewer press releases from the typewriters of Government press agents. The reason for it is a threatened shortage of mimeographing paper. Several department heads have ordered their information staffs to cut down on press releases to save paper. This condition should be a joy to Republicans who have been protesting for years against the flow of press releases from what they describe as "New Deal propagandists."

The Government Printing Office is having such a difficult time getting paper that two weeks ago its press room was placed on a five-day week. The press room had been working six days, along with other G. P. O. units. G. P. O. officials believe the shortage is only temporary.

A new test for Government press agents soon will be announced by the Civil Service Commission. Active newspaper work will be required but sports writing won't be recognized by the commission . . . Another result of the defense effort is work on canning experiments at the Agriculture Department. Zinc is a vital metal and it is used for can tops. Experimenters are trying to find substitutes . . . The file clerk exam will be held the latter part of this month.

Despite contrary reports, the Treasury doesn't plan to force Federal employes to buy defense bonds. Secretary Morgenthau is absolutely against any compulsory bond-buying plan for Federal or private employes. Ninety per cent of the Treasury employes have volunteered to buy bonds and large percentages of employes in other agencies also are buying them, but it's being done voluntarily and Morgenthau insists that it be done in that way.

More Coordination

Plans are being drawn up to place Federal power agencies indirectly under a defense power coordinator. It will be done by an executive order. No legislation is necessary. The President merely will direct the heads of Rural Electrification, Federal Power, Tennessee Valley Authority and Interior's Reclamation Service to clear all defense power problems with the power coordinator. Who will be coordinator? Certainly Interior Secretary Ickes wants the job and, if he doesn't get it, he'll lose control over his beloved public power projects. J. A. Krug, TVA expert who has been loaned to OPM, is a strong possibility.

Another executive order in the offing would set up an Office of Air Coordinator who would control the military and civil traffic on the air lanes . . . Virginia politicians say that Gov. James Price will be given a defense job when his term expires early in January. The Governor has been mentioned as civilian defense chief to succeed Mayor LaGuardia. Incidentally, the civilian defense agency has become sort of a political football between the Conference of Mayors and the Council of State Governments. When Frank Bane was chief the council was in the saddle but when LaGuardia took over he kicked out the council henchmen and now the Conference of Mayors is riding high. The Council of State Governments now ignores the agency and deals with OPM.

It's reported on good authority that Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt has personally investigated most of the cases where Federal employes have been fired on Communists charges. Several of the employes axed are understood to have appealed to the White House. Mrs. Roosevelt is said to have been given the facts of each case. She has in no way tried to influence the decision of a Government agency, and apparently her only interest is to see that no rank injustices are done.

Czecho-Slovakians and Swiss Here Celebrate

Poles, Czechs, Slovaks Hold Joint Outing

Czechs, Slovaks and Poles made merry together yesterday at the picnic sponsored by the Czecho-Slovak American Center at Koday's Grove, Hillside, Md.

Washington probably is the only city in the country where Czechs and Slovaks still gather together despite the belief of both that the Slovakian Republic is but a made-in-Germany invention that will disappear when Czecho-Slovakia returns to its place in the sun as an independent nation.

In the winter members of the Center meet monthly on the first Sunday, at Pythian Temple, but in summer, forswearing the heavy ceremonial costumes that are worn at the winter meetings, they make merry in the old-fashioned Czecho-Slovakian manner, intermingled with the ways of America, to which they are equally loyal.

The dance floor expressed this best, when fox trots and tangoes were mingled with folk dance numbers (put on, it was explained, so that some of the older folk would think the picnic was genuine.) The best American slang was intermixed with the courtly greetings of the "old country."

One of the popular pastimes at the picnic, even as in the old country, was bowling on an alley which had a dirt base but worked just as well as the best waxed American alley. Almost every back yard in the old country has one of these inexpensive alleys, it was explained.

Frank Druzba is president; Z. Ptacek is vice president; Emil Jettmar, treasurer, and Mary Klementik, secretary.

Swiss Celebrate 650th Year Of Democracy in Homeland

That yodeling heard yesterday back of the trees in the big lawn at 2920 Cathedral Avenue Northwest, was in praise of a democracy already 200 years old when Columbus discovered America.

Swiss men with glasses of beer and Swiss women with glasses of ginger ale sang of August 1, 1291, when the Everlasting League was made between the men of Uri, Schwyz and Nidwalden for self-defense and their homeland's freedom.

They came here from the Swiss Club of Baltimore, and assembled on the new Legation grounds with members of the Washington Swiss, Stauffaeherin and Helvetia Societies. Some wore native Swiss clothes and all were given little badges.

Their homeland's flag was on the new building, soon to be occupied by the Legation. Talkmg together in groups, some mentioned the troubled times, and then remembered that Switzerland's freedom had lasted through a lot of things, for a long time.

Charles Bruggman, the Swiss Minister, related his country's history and remarked on its present neutrality.

"Neutrality," he asserted, "is not only a right. It is also a strong obligation of our country which guarantees that no one can use it for attacks on others without encountering all the resistance which is our might."

Swiss soldiers, he said, watch the frontiers. "Still, the sky is dark for Switzerland as long as the storm rages, but we stand on our firm ground . . . Do your best to make the spirit of our homeland known . . . The way which we go is the wya of human conscience."

Hans Kirchhofer, 1661 Park Road Northwest, founder of the Swiss Club here, master of ceremonies at the celebration, said the Swiss were renowned marksmen, and Switzerland is now untroubled by invaders. "There may be a reason," he reflected.

Jesuits Celebrate Feast Day Of St. Ignatius Loyola

The "Spiritual exercises" of St. Ignatius Loyola were celebrated in local and nearby Jesuit institutions yesterday, Feast Day of that patron saint.

Principal services were at St. Aloysius Catholic Church, North Capitol and K Streets, and the Baltimore-Washington Archdiocesan Retreat House at Manresa, near Annapolis. Men of St. Aloysius and St. Francis de Sales parishes held a retreat at the latter place. Holy Trinity Catholic Church, adjoining Georgetown University, celebrated the occasion last Thursday—the official date.

The Rev. Edward Bartley, summer assistant at St. Aloysius', preaching at its special service, called St. Ignatius Loyola's "Christ-likeness" his greatest quality, and cited St. Ignatius' influence over St. Francis Xavier, one of his contemporaries. The Rev. James Curry, formerly of the Gonzaga High School faculty, was mass celebrant.

The "spiritual exercises" have been called "an application of the Gospel precepts to the individual soul, written to arouse conviction of sin, judgment and justice."

The Society of Jesus received official papal recognition in 1540, and St. Ignatius was eleceted its first general in 1541.

Burned Woman's Condition Is Fair

Mrs. Frances Rudy, 52, of 818 Otis Place Northwest, was in fair condition in Emergency Hospital after her husband discovered her with her clothing ablaze in the basement of their home Saturday.

Police at the Tenth Precinct said they have not been able to question the woman about the origin of the fire due to her condition. She is being treated for multiple second degree burns to the body.

Manassas, Va., Aug. 3.—A special meeting of Agriculture Adjustment Administration Committeemen of Prince William County to discuss the 1942 conservation program has been called for 9 a. m. Tuesday, at the Manassas Postoffice, by F. A. Lewis, county chairman. Joseph Copley, State AAA field man, will lead the discussion.

First-Aid Course Will Begin Tonight

A first-aid training course for Negroes will be opened by the Red Cross tonight at Banneker Recreational Hall, 2500 Georgia Avenue, it was announced yesterday by Robert H. Duncan, director of the first-aid section of the District Chapter.

The training course is part of a city-wide campaign by the Red Cross to train thousands of citizens to meet local emergencies. Classes will meet on Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays from 6 p. m. to 8 p. m. James T. Chambers, Red Cross first-aid instructor, will be in charge.

Farm Bureau to Hold Picnic in Monocacy Park

The annual picnic of the Montgomery County Farm Bureau will be held at Furnace Ford Bridge, Monocacy Park, August 14, it has been announced at the office of the farm bureau, Rockville.

The committee of arrangements is composed of Mrs. Ward A. Fulton, Mrs. Edwin D. Fry, Mrs. G. M. Hostetter, James D. King, Willard Harvey, Otto W. Anderson, Rufus B. King. One of the outstanding features will be a beauty contest to select the 1941 farm princess of the county.

Mechanized Units to Train In Caroline

Fort Meade Troops Will Join Similar Outfits of Entire Second Army Corps

By the Associated Press

Fort George G. Meade, Md., Aug. 3.—All mechanized units of the Twenty-ninth Infantry Division will concentrate tomorrow with similar troops of the entire Second Army Corps for training during the next three weeks.

The combined forces of about 6,000 officers and men from the three divisions will meet at the A. P. Hill Military Reservation in Caroline County, Va., where their military training will be under the supervision of Maj. Howard R. Johnson, Second Army Corps anti-mechanized officer.

Twenty-ninth Division units taking part include the newly organized 104th Antitank Battalion, under the command of Lieut. Col. E. E. De Muth, and the antitank companies of the division's four infantry regiments.

Three companies are from Virginia's 116th and 176th Infantry Regiments and the 115th and 175th Infantry, both Maryland regiments.

The five units will train with the antimechanized forces of the Forty-fourth Division from Fort Dix, N. J., and the Twenty-eighth Division from Indiantown Gap, Pa. Mechanized forces of the 104th Cavalry and two aerial observation squadrons also will take part.

Lieut. Col. Thomas J. Shryock, newly appointed anti-mechanized officer for the Twenty-ninth Division, has been coordinating the work of the division's units.

115th Infantry Going To Camp Ritchie

Maryland's 115th Infantry Regiment will make a shuttle movement Monday to Camp Albert C. Ritchie, Cascade, Md., where the soldiers will train until Thursday.

One part of the regiment will be taken by truck to within 12 or 14 miles of Camp Ritchie and march the rest of the way. At the time these troops leave Fort Meade the rest of the regiment will start marching toward Ritchie. They will be picked up by the returning trucks and will ride the rest of the way.

Both marching and motor columns will undergo special training in protection against aircraft attack. The regiment's kitchen train will drive straight through to Camp Ritchie to have a meal ready when the troops arrive.

A normal regimental training problem will be followed Tuesday and Wednesday, with possibly a battalion problem added. The return to Fort Meade will be made Thursday.

There will also be time for recreation. Col. D. John Markey, regimental commander, is urging men to take their swimming trunks, since both swimming and boating can be enjoyed on the reservation at Camp Ritchie.

Accordionist, 6, Thrills 1,500 As N. Mexico Band Plays Here

Six-year-old Carlos Gonzales, from Albuquerque, N. Mex., adjusted his green turban last night, blinked at the huge floodlights on either side, and then calmly played an accordion solo before more than 1,500 persons at the Sylvan Theater near the Washington Monument.

He and 24 older boys and girls who constitute New Mexico's Grand National Championship Accordion Band, under the direction of Miss Violet Kastning, were giving a specially arranged festival concert. The group is on an Eastern States tour, having just played at a music convention in New York.

Carlos Gonzales, who plays a midget accordion, is not at all nervous about appearing before large audiences. "If I don't bother them, they don't bother me," he said briefly.

The young accordionist had his sixth birthday several days ago, but says that he won't really be six until he gets home and has a party. He is not homesick either, he says, because his mother, and two brothers who are in the band, are also on the trip.

The accordion band was organized in 1932 with six boys and girls as charter members, and since then has won many prizes, including the National Accordionist Championship last year.

Clinton P. Anderson, United States Representative-at-Large from New Mexico, was master of ceremonies at last night's concert.

Weather Leads Worshipers To Hold Services Outdoors

Fair weather led to outdoor religious services in Washington and vicinity yesterday. Indoor union services and other worship programs also were well-attended.

Worshipers went to Lincoln and Franklin Parks, Washington Grove, Md., Fort Lincoln Chapel, Camp Letts and other places to Catholic and Protestant services.

Addressing Catholic Evidence Guild services in Franklin Park, layman Leo A. Foley said that man can't be indifferent to Christ's message, since He has "given us His credentiails through miracles and prophecies."

An all-request program of gospel songs was given at the Little Church of Fort Lincoln, Bladensburg Road and the District Line. The Gospel Male Quartet sang, Meredith L. Porte was guest organist and Chester G. Sparks, master of ceremonies.

The Fireside Youth Group of Chevy Chase Presbyterian Church last night launched a discussion series on "The Glorification of God in Nature." The Rev. Ben Cowles, minister of religious education, presided.

Protestant congregations of the Brookland—Woodbridge area met for a joint service last night at St. Stephen's Lutheran Church, 1611 Brentwood Road Northeast. The Rev. Charles F. Phillips, new McKendree Methodist pastor, preached.

All Souls' Unitarian, Universalist National Memorial and Mount Pleasant Congregational churches continued their summer union services, with the last-named church as yesterday's host. The guest speaker was John R. Scotford, of New York City, associate editor of the Missionary Herald at Home and Abroad.

The Salvation Army, Temple Corps, held outdoor services in the Hecht Commpany parking pavilion, Sixth and E. Streets, Northwest, with Maj. F. F. Cox in charge.

Many attended vespers under the trees of Washington Grove, near the home of Dr. W. L. Darby, president of the Washington City Bible Society. The Rev. Orris G. Robinson, pastor of Calvary Methodist Church here, spoke.

Edwin H. DeGroot, jr., president of Central Union Mission, addressed Y. M. C. A.-sponsored services in Lincoln Park. The "Y" also had services in Camp Letts, Md.

Chief Chaplain Dedicates New Chapel at Bolling Field

Weapons of land, sea, and air cannot defend a "spiritually unarmed" Nation, Chief of Army Chaplains William R. Arnold said yesterday at dedication of an Air Corps chapel at Bolling Field.

The chapel was the first Air Corps church to be dedicated, among nearly 500 places of worship being erected in Army camps.

Chaplain Arnold said that it is as necessary to train a man's soul as his body. "An army of such men," he stated, "determine the issue of any battle or any war, before the foe attacks."

"Here will come," he said, "free men of a free country, armed to defend the rights which God gave them. Here God will armor them with the shield of faith and the helmet of salvation. Here he will knight them with the sword of the Spirit."

Chaplain Arnold called the development of aviation "another indication of our spiritual origin and our dependence upon Almighty God." Men of the air, he said, should find it easy to know, admire and worship God.

In praising the chapel, he said the Corps of Engineers "has done its work well, has made a real contribution to the spiritual life of the Army."

Col. William J. Barden, on behalf of the Engineers' Corps, formally presented the chapel to Lieut. Col. A. C. Walker, Bolling Field commanding officer. Chaplain Harry C. Fraser, of the Air Force Combat Command, gave the invocation, and Chaplain Joseph Donoghue, of Bolling Field, the benediction.

Naval Reserve Seeks Doctors And Dentists

Third and fourth year medical or dental students registered for Selective Service are eligible for appointment as ensigns in the Naval Reserve, William E. Leahy, local draft chief, has announced.

Leahy declared that he has been advised by national Selective Service headquarters that such ensigns will not be ordered to active duty prior to completion of their medical or dental course.

Also, he asserted, it is the intention of the Navy Department to have them complete one year's internship before assigning them to active duty. Upon graduation they will be reappointed as lieutenants (junior grade) in the Naval Reserve, without professional examination.

Internes who are Selective Service registrants and who are graduates of Class "A" medical schools, Leahy said, may apply for appointment in the Naval Reserve as lieutenant (junior grade). Application forms may be obtained from the commandant of the Bureau of Medicine and Surgery in the Navy Department.

1,971 Army Trucks Roll Through City In Early Morning

A cavalcade of 1,971 Army trucks rolled through the city early today.

Police from seven precincts and Maryland and Virginia State Police were called to assist the movements of the transports through the metropolitan area.

A total of 1,850 trucks belonging to the Forty-fourth Division, traveling north, entered the city shortly before midnight at the Memorial Bridge and Highway Bridge. Six hundred traveled over Memorial Bridge, proceeding north on Twenty-second Street to K Street, east on K Street to Fifteenth Street, north on Fifteenth Street to Rhode Island Avenue and thence to the District Line. The larger group of trucks from this Division entered the city at the Highway Bridge proceeding along Fourteenth Street to D Street, east on D to Maryland Avenue then north on Third Street to New York Avenue to Bladensburg Road.

FBI to Study Bandit Car Fingerprints

Pay Roll Robbers Left Clews on Stolen Auto Later Found Abandoned

Fingerprints found on the abandoned stolen automobile used in Saturday's daylight payroll car holdup in Washington will be analyzed by the Federal Bureau of Investigation, it was disclosed yesterday.

Detectives from the robbery squad said fingerprints had been obtained but they were not positive the prints "are any good."

The car was found five hours after the holdup in the 800 block of South Capitol Street, at Sixth and G Streets Southwest. A payroll of $3,200 was taken by two men from the manager and cashier of the Valley Forge Distributing Co.

Meanwhile, the robbery squad was busy with eight new robberies reported over the weekend.

Frank Gordon, proprietor of a grocery store, 249 Minnesota Avenue Northeast, reported his store entered by forcing a transom over the front window early yesterday morning. Missing are 45 cartons of cigarettes, four hams and $35 in bills and silver.

Leo G. Sheridan, 3000 Connecticut Avenue Northwest, told police his apartment was entered by someone who jimmied the door, stealing $14 in household articles.

Nettie Gilbert, 1326 H Street Northeast, reported stolen an indorsed check for $3,006, $7 in cash and a ruby dinner ring. She said the thief made his entrance by removing a screen from the back porch.

Harry A. Goode, 1715 L Street Northeast, reported his house ransacked by thieves who gained entrance by removing a screen from the rear window.

Norman J. Altmann of Mount Vernon, N. Y., told police his car was entered and $82 worth of clothing stolen, while it was parked in the 1900 block of G Street Northwest. Daisy M. Hopkins, 1736 Galen Street Northeast, reported her house broken into and a .22 rifle taken. She said the thief climbed a tree near the front porch and broke the glass in the front bedroom window on the second floor.

Helen Maurity, 815 Tenth Street Northwest, reported $30 in jewelry stolen from her room early yesterday.

Browns Stop Yankees and Joe DiMaggio Twice

Niggeling, Harris Win Over Leaders

37,829 See Yanks Lose, 6-2 and 5-0; Ruffing and Donald Losing Pitchers

By the Associated Press

New York, Aug. 3.—Before 37,829 customers the last-place St. Louis Browns did a masterfully thorough job of stopping the League-leading Yankees dead in their tracks twice today, 6-2 and 5-0.

In the first game of a double-header Johnny Niggeling, with his "butterfly" knuckle-ball, held them to four hits, broke Joe Dimaggio's latest hitting streak at 16 games, and saw his mates blast Red Ruffing off the mound after Ruffing had won nine straight games.

First Double Defeat

That example simply served as a spur for Bob Harris, who pitched for the Brownies in the nightcap. He turned in a two-hitter that shut out the Yanks for the first time since May 30. It also marked the first time this season that the league leaders have dropped both ends of a double-header. DiMaggio was also hitless in that game.

The Yanks got away in front in the opening game on Charley Keller's twenty-seventh home run of the year and added another run in the third. Through the fifth Ruffing had the Browns shut out, making 35 consecutive innings in which the opposition had not scored.

But Niggeling singled in the sixth, and the Browns were on their way. In three innings, aided by errors by Red Rolfe and Joe Gordon, they bagged six runs. Niggeling drove in one with his second hit off Ruffing.

Donald Pounded

In the second game Harris let only one man get as far as second, and that was first baseman Johnny Sturm, who doubled in the first inning.

The Browns belted Atley Donald for 10 of their 11 hits and all their runs. Singles by Judnich, who got three safeties, and Berardino and Grace's double were good for two in the second; singles by Lucadello, Clift and Judnich, with a wild pitch by Donald thrown in, brought two more in the fifth, and Clift's double drove in Swift with the final tally in the sixth.

Writers Honor Reds' Manager And F. McCormick

By the Associated Press

Cincinnati, Aug. 3.—Manager Bill McKechnie of the Cincinnati Reds and First Baseman Frank McCormick were honorpd at the start of today's double-header by presentation of awards voted them by the Baseball Writers' Association in a poll sponsored by the Sporting News.

John Cooney, 40-year-old Boston outfielder whose .325 batting average ranks him third in the National league, made the presentation.

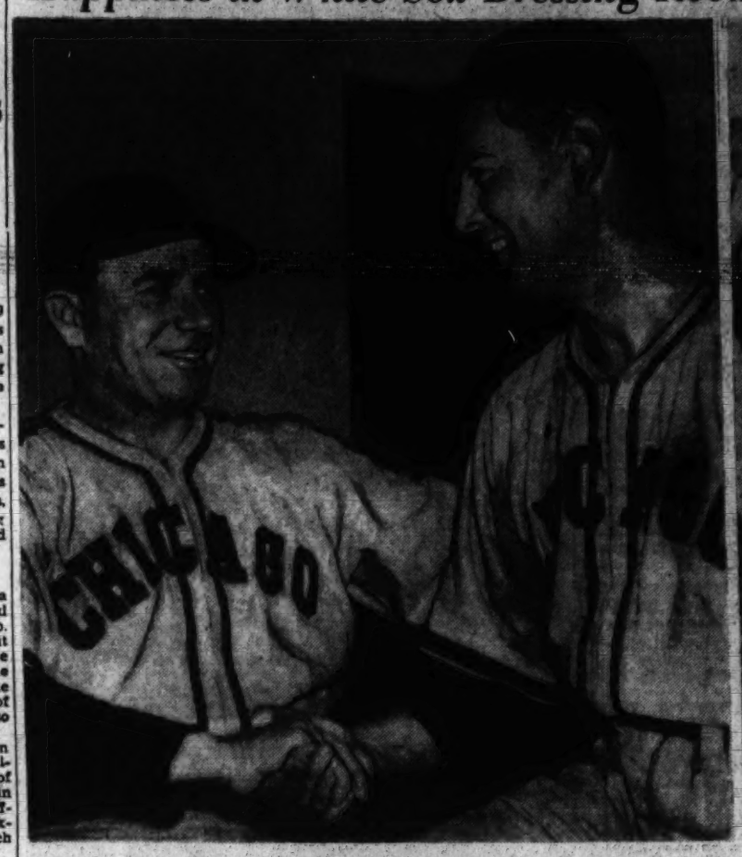
Happiness in White Sox Dressing Room, but . . . No Joy in Yankee Stadium



Manager Jimmy Dykes congratulates smiling Teddy Lyons after the 40-year-old pitcher shut out the Nats with six hits yesterday for his tenth triumph of the season. Lyons himself made four hits in the ball game.

White Sox Pound Sundra and Zuber for 18 Hits; Lyons and Tresh Make Four Hits Each

By Shirley Povich

The White Sox pounded two Washington pitchers for 18 hits yesterday. The Nats? They hit the cellar. Seven thousand Washington fans didn't get a run for their money. It was a shutout victory for 40-year-old Ted Lyons of the White Sox. The score was 9 to 0, and the Nats could have achieved the same result by not showing up and forfeiting the ball game.

For Lyons it was a delightful afternoon. He was recording his tenth victory of the season against five defeats, and it was a breeze what with the White Sox scoring in five different innings.

Lyons was giving the Nats something of a private battle of it in the hitting department. Going into the ninth, he was holding the Nats to a tie. They had four hits, and so did he, personally. But he couldn't hold 'em. In the ninth, the Nats made two more hits and outhit Lyons.

2 Runs on No Hits

Only in the eighth inning did the White Sox go hitless against Steve Sundra and Bill Zuber, and in that inning they came up with two runs nevertheless. Two bases on balls, three stolen bases and a passed ball got the runs over the plate and jeers were heard in the stands.

It was the White Sox's greatest hitting show of the season. Last in the league in team batting, they found the cure in the pitching of Sundra and Zuber. The Chicago battery of Lyons and Tresh collected eight hits during the afternoon. Taft Wright swatted three, including a triple. Only Mike Kreevich went hitless.

Lyons meantime was giving the Nats a horrible time of it with his knuckle ball. From the second to the eighth inning, he pitched to only three batters per inning, and for sevent innings he was hurling three-hit ball. Two of those hits belong to Cecil Travis. Only one man reached second against Lyons in the last eight innings. He struck out five.

Aderholt Hitless

Rookie Morris Aderholt went hitless, struck out twice and otherwise did not distinguish himself in his first trial at third base with the Nats. He messed up the first batted

Bishop Finally Wins Golf Title

New Haven, Conn., Aug. 3 (INS).—After five unsuccessful tries for the New England amateur golf championship, cool, lanky Ted Bishop, a Boston ice cream salesman, won the coveted prize today by beating Holly Mandly, Hartford electrical contractor, 3 and 2, in a hotly contested 36-hole match beneath a scorching sun on the New Haven Country Club links.

Dodgers Rout Cubs, 10 to 2, Before 21,370

By International News Service

Chicago, Aug. 3.—Although it wasn't quite enough to regain the league leadership for them, the Brooklyn Dodgers did the best they could today by trouncing the Chicago Cubs, 10 to 2, before a crowd of 21,370 at Wrigley Field.

The Dodgers won the game with a seven-hit assault which drove both Bill Lee and Tot Pressnell from the mound in the second inning. Wasdell, Riggs, Franks, Wyatt, Reese and Herman singled in successive trips to the plate. Then Hal Reiser doubled. The inning netted the Dodgers six runs.

Witlow Wyatt went the full route for the Dodgers, holding the Cubs to seven hits. The Cubs used a total of four pitchers, Jake Mooty and Charley Root following Lee and Pressnell to the mound, but none had much luck in holding down the Dodgers.

40,200 See Feller Win; A's-Tribe Split

By the Associated Press

Philadelphia, Aug. 3.—Famed Bob Feller, of Cleveland, finally chalked up his twentieth victory of the season today as the Indians split a doubleheader with the Athletics.

The largest crowd in the history of Shibe Park, 40,200, saw Feller hold the A's to three hits as the Indians won the first game, 6 to 3. The Athletics won the afterpiece, 4 to 3, when Wally Moses raced home from third after Dick Siebert's fly in the ninth.

Feller, who had failed in three previous attempts to grab Victory No. 20, walked seven and struck out three. The A's converted three of the walks into runs. Meantime the Indians knocked Les McCrabb out of the box in the fourth to take 5-2 lead and make things comparatively easy for Rapid Robert.

Cleveland, helped by Jeff Heath's homer in the third, took a 2-0 lead in the second game, but the A's knocked Heving out in the fifth, scoring three runs on five singles by Al Brancato, Wally Moses, Bob Johnson, Siebert and Sam Chapman. Cleveland tied it in the Yankees Invade Stadium Today; Chase vs. Russo

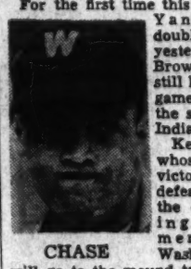
For the first time this season the Yanks lost a double - header yesterday to the Browns, but they still hold an 11½ game lead over the second-place Indians.



CHASE

Ken Chase, whose mere four victories and 12 defeats label him the chief pitching disappointment on the Washington club will go to the mound today. It will be an all-southpaw affair with Marius Russo pitching for the Yankees. Russo has beaten the Nats three times this season.

Angott to Meet Tigh August 11

Louisville, Ky., Aug. 3 (AP).—Sammy Angott, of Louisville, recognized by the National Boxing Association as the lightweight champion, has signed for a ten-round nontitle bout with Jimmy Tigh, of Philadelphia, at Forbes Field, in Pittsburgh, August 11. Charlie Jones, Angott's manager, made the announcement today.

Craig Wood Captures 'World's Golf Crown'

National Open King's 63 on First Round Too Much for Vic Ghezzi; Putting Decides

By the Associated Press

Mahoning County Club, Girard Ohio, Aug. 3.—Playing the cool, steady game which has kept him among the Nation's leading golfers for 20 years, personable Craig Wood today won the unofficial world championship with a decisive five and four victory over husky Vic Ghezzi.

The National Open king virtually clinched the mythical crown and its $2,500 prize with a sensational 7 under par 63 in the first round of the 72-hole classic. That amazing score put him 7 up and Ghezzi, the P. G. A. titlist, had clipped only two off the margin when the match ended on the sixty-eighth green.

Victory came to the 39-year-old blond blaster with 258, six under the total compiled by the Deal, N. J., star. They played out the full 72 with Wood carding 63-70-68-70—271 and Ghezzi 71-69-68-69—277. They continued even on the last four "exhibition" holes, each registering three threes and a final four.

Ironically the match wound up in a putting contest, with the winner beating Vic at his own game. Craig negotiated the 68 holes with 103 putts, 13 less than the victim.

3-Footer Ended It

The official end came with Wood dropping a three footer for a half after Ghezzi's second shot rolled off the green. "I guess you'd say I won it with mirrors," Wood said in the locker room. "Since winning the Open I had been having a lot of trouble getting my game going at top speed.

"Watching movies gave me an idea and two nights before the match here I stood in front of a mirror checking my swing. I found I was lifting my hands too much and opening the face of the club."

Ghezzi, who putted short on seven holes of the final round, commented: "I wish I could have made a closer match of it. That 63 was too much for me."

First Round Decided

The story of the classic was Wood's torrid start and Ghezzi's inability to putt well enough to whittle down the big margin. The victor consistently outdrove the pro king from 10 to 50 yards and showed amazing skill at recoveries and on his short approaches.

Ghezzi got in little trouble on the narrow 6,351-yard Mahoning layout, but invariably pitched far from the pin and couldn't make his one putts drop. In the late rounds his failure on the greens tightened him up a bit and Chain-Smoker Wood calmly halved hole after hole.

The Wood-Ghezzi tussle was the second classic staged over Wellman's course this year. In June Clayton Heafner, of Linville, N. C., took the $5,000 Mahoning Valley Open with a 276.

D. C. Policeman Wins Pistol Title

Chambersburg, Pa., Aug. 3.—M. I. Bridges, Washington police, won the individual title in the Cumberland Valley pistol championships today with an 899 aggregate. Samuel Kirk, Wilmington, Del., was second, 897; Chester Coons, Annapolis, third, 891. Elsie Penn, Baltimore, won the women's title with a 674 aggregate; Free State Rifle and Pistol Club won the team title with 1,971.

Cards Defeat Phils Twice, Increase Lead

By the Associated Press

St. Louis, Aug. 3.—Morton Cooper ended a long term on the hospital list and Lon Warneke overcome a jinx today to score identical 6 to 1 triumphs for the Cardinals in a double-header with last-place Philadelphia.

Cooper started his last game June 17. An operation for removal of a bone growth on his pitching elbow June 23 placed him on the shelf after he had won seven, lost three.

Touched for only six hits in the first game, Cooper was deprived of a shutout by John Rizzo's homer in the eighth inning. Although Dan Litwhiler followed with a triple and Merrill May walked, Cooper accelerated his fast ball and struck out Bob Bragan to end the rally.

For Warneke in the nightcap it was victory No. 13, a hump that has proved as rugged as his native Arkansas Ozarks. Twice before Lon had been within one out, even one strike, of a victory. He started

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

One of our favorite ball players is Ted Lyons who, six days a week is a swell sort of guy. On the seventh day, from 3 to 5 p. m., he's the meanest, grumpiest person you ever did see. That's the day he pitches, usually on Sunday, and he pulls a shutter over his smiling face and goes to work, hard. That's probably why, pitching only once a week, he has won ten games this season thus far.

POVICH

His White Sox pals forgive him for his Sunday pout or grimness, or what ever you call it. That's the day he's out to earn his coffee and cakes. On every other day of the week, he's the life of the party on the Chicago bench or in the dressing room. The White Sox are one of the happiest teams in the league and Lyons is one of the reasons why. He keeps 'em laughing with his drollery.

Last month, the 40-year-old Lyons lost a tough game to the 41-year-old Lefty Grove of the Red Sox. For nine innings, Lyons didn't even smile. When the game ended, Teddy walked into the dressing room and orated. "No wonder Grove beat me. He's a year older than I am. I've only been pitching in this league for 19 years."

Out in Chicago, they love him. On Ted Lyons Day last year, one newspaper launched a drive for dimes for Teddy Lyons. Chicago fans chipped in with enough dimes to make a bushel wheat sack bulge when it was carried to the plate for the ceremonies. He as presented with enough portable radios to outfit every room in his Texas home. They gave him a convertible coup that had more accessories than a yacht. Mrs. Grace Comiskey, owner of the team, presented him with a check that amounted to $100 for each of the 18 years he had been with the club.

Lyons Was on Way to Races

Our favorite Ted Lyons story concerns the day he was overhauled for speeding by a Chicago motor cop. He was on his way to the races at Arlington Park on an off day, with Gerry Walker. The afternoon before, he had been knocked out of the box, and had been forced to duck a dozen line drives that threatened to decapitate him. When the cop overhauled him, he demanded gruffly:

"Right here in Chicago," said Lyons.

Even as a mere Sunday pitcher, Lyons has been earning $12,000 a year for the past 13 years. He has been a once-a-week pitcher almost since 1930, when he hurt his arm. Before that he threw a fast ball. Now he's a knuckle baller, strictly. "I show 'em my fast ball sometimes," he was saying, "but it's no good."

He remembers vividly the day he hurt his arm. It was ten days after he had reported to the White Sox camp in 1930 after a siege of influenza. He tried to break a curve ball across the plate and something snapped in his shoulder. He didn't know he was really hurt until he drove from the ball park after the game. He could scarcely turn the wheel of his car.

Lyons was lucky enough to know how to throw the knuckle ball which has been his bread and butter since that accident. He was throwing a knuckler when he was in high school in Louisiana. As a kid he read a copy of the Sporting News, the baseball bible, that contained Eddie Rommel's trips on how to throw a knuckler. He mimicked Rommel as well as he could.

Lyons Throws Different Kind of Knuckler

Lyons' knuckler actually isn't Rommel's knuckler, nor is it Dutch Leonard's. Rommell threw the old-fashioned knuckler, off the knuckles of a half-closed fist. Leonard throws it with the nub of two fingers, on which he has developed callousted tips. Leonard keeps his finger-nails pared to the flesh. Lyons throws his knuckler with three fingers and the aid of his nails, which he digs deep into the seems of the ball. If he breaks a finger nail, as he has done, he is virtually useless to the club for a month, until it re-grows.

They used to call him the Baylor Bear. That's where he came from, Baylor College, in Texas. He made it direct to the big leagues from the campus. Ray Schalk went to Baylor in 1923 to scout a college catcher and came away with Lyons' contract, ignoring Lyons' battery mate whom other scouts had recommended.

Lyons pitched a no-hit game once, against Boston in 1926, but the no-hit game he didn't pitch was more dramatic. It happened in Griffith Stadium in 1925. Lyons was pitching for the White Sox and had a 17-0 lead. Two were out in the ninth and the Nats didn't have a hit, when Manager Bucky Harris sent the veteran Bobby Veach in to pinch hit. Veach hit a droopy single to right field, to cheat Lyons of his no-hitter.

"That was my fault," Lyons was saying yesterday. "Buck Crouse signaled me for a fast ball and I shook him off. I haven't shaken off another catcher since."

Sabin Falters, but Finally Gains Net Third Round at Rye

By the Associated Press

Rye, N. Y., Aug. 3.—A near upset marked the Eastern grass courts tennis championships today when Charles Mattmann, a local youngster who studies at University of Los Angeles, forced fifth-seeded Wayne Sabin, of Reno, Nev., to three sets before succumbing, 2—6, 6—4, 6—3. Sabin is the first player to reach the third round.

Mattmann breezed through the opening set by rushing the net to score placement after placement. Sabin was unable to handle his service.

Moylan Victor

The only minor surprise of the day came in a first round match in which Edward Moylan, of Trenton, N. J., appearing for the first season in big-time tennis, disposed of Gus Ganzenmueller, former Columbia University tennis captain, 5—7, 7—5, 9—7.

Francisco Segura, of Ecuador, former South American singles champion, breezed through his first-round match with Rawle De Land, of Searsdale, N. Y., 6—0, 6—1.

Segura will find tougher opposition in his second round match tomorrow, for he is pitted against Earl H. Cochell, jr., of Los Angeles, who today disposed of David Jones, one time National Intercollegiate Champion, 6—1, 6—1.

Scores Handily

The feature women's match saw Patricia Canning of Hidden Valley, Calif., easily down 15-year-old Lillian Lopaus of New York, 6—2, 6—0.

Mrs. August Ganzenmueller, jr., of Seacliff had considerable difficulty with Mary Ann Morgenstern of Pemosa Beach, Calif., before she finally won 7—5, 6—4. Jacqueline Goldschmidt of Paris, France, upset Betty Rosenquist of South Orange, N. J., in straight sets, 6—4, 6—1.

Schroeder, Mulloy Win Doubles Title

Southampton, N. Y., Aug. 3 (AP).—Ted Schroeder, of Glendale, Calif., and Gardnar Mulloy, of Miami, Fla., captured the doubles honors today in the Fifty-first Invitation Tennis Tournament at the Meadow Club. They defeated Sidney B. Wood, jr., of Southampton, and Ladislav Hecht, of New York, former Czech Davis Cup star, in the final round, 6—4, 6—3, 6—3.

Chris Dundee in Dilemma Over His Three Fighters

By the Associated Press

New York, Aug. 3.—Chris Dundee fixed the ice pack on his head, pulled over the aspirin bottle and accepted an invitation to join him in a nice friendly headache.

OVERLIN

Now Chris does a particularly hustling job of managing fighters. And since he has at the moment, three championship challenging gems ranked right up front and center by all critics, there signs of pains in the noggin seem as considerable of a surprise.

"Sure, so I got Ken Overlin and Georgie Abrams, the middleweights, and Jimmy Webb, the Texas light-heavyweight," Chris mourned. "So what? Abrams beat Billy Soose, the middleweight champ, the other night in an over-weight fight and figures to get a title shot. Overlin lost the crown to Soose and deserves a return match. Now Overlin is hollering that I crossed him by getting Georgie the nontitle go with Soose. I don't know what to do to satisfy 'em both.

"And, if that isn't enough, there's Webb. He beat Tommy Tucker a few months ago and is supposed to get the fight with Gus Lesnevich for the light-heavyweight championship next month. So I match him with old Mose Brown in Pittsburgh last week, more to give him some work than anything else. Mose figured to be a soft touch. Yeah—about as soft as getting kissed by a brick. He walked out, threw a wild punch that landed right on Webb's whiskers, and Jimmy got stiffened. So Tami Mauriello gets the Lesnevich fight. And I got a pain."

You had to admit that although he should be having a lot of fun right now with three money-makers in his pocket, Dundee actually was getting more bangs than bouquets.

Off Abrams' three victories over Soose, and the fact that Overlin lost his title to the Pennsylvanian, Georgie probably rates a crack at Billy with the title on the line. But Promoter Mike Jacobs Leans toward Overlin, and has hinted Ken will get a chance this fall to regain that portion of the title which is recognized in New York, California, Pennsylvania and a few way stations.

Since both sailor boy-belters, Georgie and Ken, are managed by Dundee, they can't very well fight each other. Chris now is toying with the idea of landing Abrams a title go with Tony Zale, who owns the National Boxing Association's half of the championship. But if he does, and supposing Abrams wins that one and Overlin takes his title back from Soose, Chris will only be jumping out of the frying pan into a platter of scrambled eggs.

Black Caddy Smashes Jumping Record in Columbus Show

Rocksie Out Of 'Scraper Class Early

Glamour Man Wins Conformation Crown; 4 Jump-Offs Needed In Feature Event

By Anne Hagner

The Black Caddy-Rocksie high-jumping duel reached new heights at the Columbus Horse Show yesterday, as Caddy toppled the local record by leaping 6 feet 6½ inches in the skyscraper class, to break his old rival's mark by half an inch.

The little stallion carried a big handicap, as his owner-rider, Lieut. Fred J. Hughes, jr., weighs 175 pounds, but it bothered him little, as he outfenced Mrs. M. E. Whitney's First Night and Mr. and Mrs. Gardner Hallman's Lady Jack after four jump-offs at the tremendous wall of bars.

Margaret Cotter's Rocksie, Caddy's No. 1 adversary in such events since high-jumping commenced here in 1939, bowed out of competition as he scored a knockdown at 6 feet—the first time, incidentally, that he has ever rolled a pole at that height.

The Bear Goes Home

A fleeting lameness on the part of Mrs. Whitney's The Bear kept him from winning the conformation hunter preliminary, a class in which he ordinarily shines. He was beaten by one point for the coveted Bobby Robey Memorial Trophy, given to Mrs. D. N. Lee's Glamour Man for earning most points during the show.

Regardless of losing that honor, The Bear had already piled up enough tallies to take the conformation hunter title over Betty Couzens' Repulsion. Glamour Man romped off with the green championship with Ruth O'Keefe's O'Doc in reserve, and Fenton Fadeley's Headrock outpointed Capt. J. G. Minniece's Trail Bird for the working hunters' crown.

Hardened to good jumping by seasons of seeing an excellent brand of it, railbirds showed scant interest until the top pole went to 6 feet in the skyscraper class, where Caddy, First Night, Lady Jack, Rocksie and Mrs. Whitney's Blue Eagle tied. Loud was the moan that went up from the sidelines as Rocksie first hit the optional 5-foot 9-inch fence, allowed by the committee as a schooling, and then made the same mistake over the jump that counted.

Blue Eagle, too, sent the 6-foot bar flying, leaving the remaining trio to battle it out at 6 feet 6½ inches. First Night jumped over the wing and sent Rider Norman Haymaker earthward at the optional fence. Even when the height of wing was increased, First Night's idea was firmly fixed in his mind and he insisted on leaping to the left.

Lady Jack evened the score by either refusing or scoring knockdowns in successive attempts and Black Caddy, in a kicking mood, repeatedly toppled the bar.

Title Regained

Two refusals and four knockdowns were to the credit of the little stallion before Lieut. Hughes, eager to break Rocksie's 6½-foot record, brought him back into the jump while he still felt the sting of hitting it. The strategy worked.

Caddy's present occupation of the high-jump throne is no novelty for him; he remained there from May of 1940, when he shattered Rocksie's 6-foot 3-inch mark by 1¼ inches, until two weeks ago, when Miss Cotter's mount went 6½ feet.

Capt. Charles B. McClelland's Smacko received the open jumping crown for winning 16 points during the show. Caddy's efforts for the two days gave him 14 points and the reserve title.

Ironically, U. S. Randle's Troop was defeated for the Robey Memorial by Glamour Man, a horse whose owner was coaxed into appearing with Troop in the pairs of hunters by none other than Randle. When the two won second place, Glamour Man received enough points to put him on an even basis with the Randle entry, and was ultimately given the trophy because he had won more blue ribbons than Troop.

You Can't Win—Gridder From Vanderbilt Finds

Columbia, S. C., Aug. 3 (U.P.).—Sol Kosimar, who formerly played tackle on the Vanderbilt University football team and now is in the Thirties Division, trained strenuously for months to lose the 69 pounds which he had in excess of the air corps requirements.

Kosimar made the weight qualification and took a second physical examination.

Atlanta Bows

Chattanooga, Tenn., Aug. 3 (AP).—Big Buck Marrow, former American Association veteran, pitched 16 innings for Chattanooga today, beating league-leading Atlanta in consecutive games, 8-0 and 10-1.

On the Line

—With CONSIDINE

Goshen, N. Y., Aug. 3.—They were hanging the bunting and tacking the crop cure advertisements on the old trees here today, while leafy little Goshen got ready to become the temporary capital of the sports-world.

CONSIDINE

Come Wednesday, at William H. Cane's Good Time Park, they'll be running the sixteenth annual Hambletonian, or Corn Tassel Derby. Come Thursday, a bunch of Hambletonian alumni will race in the trotting derby, which is expected to produce a performance that will tend to dim the memory of the Man o' War of the harness game, gaunt, gray Greyhound.

Sunday in Goshen is ordinarily quieter than two church mice who aren't speaking. But today you could feel the life stirring in the old village, and see a jaunty air in the step of the old gaffers who follow the harness game. The Hambletonian and trotting derby will bring up a certain number of young bloods, with their rakish roadsters and raffish leers at the sun-bonnets and farmers' hats in the old wooden grandstands. But, fundamentally, it will be an ancient crowd . . . A slice of the America of David Harum and Mark Twain . . . Of Sunday rides in a carriage. . . Of straw hats with wide brims and gay hatbands . . . Of drowsy August days with the swallows swooping noiselessly through the wide doors of red barns.

Looks like eight will start in the $45,000 Hambletonian, the richest of the series since 1932 when the Marchioness, owned by the only woman ever to own a Hambletonian winner, won most of the $53,000 purse.

Along the stoops of the village's old hotels, and under its great reaching trees, the oldsters gummed out many a cackling prediction today, as to the outcome of the race. The sentimental favorite is going to be Dr. Hugh M. Parshall's brown colt, Perpetual, to be piloted in the race by Doc himself. Perpetual couldn't win a race last year as a 2-year-old, but Parshall nursed the high stepper home to victory in the $8,000 Matron Stake at Toledo in June and the $10,000 National at Old Orchard, Me., a couple of weeks ago.

The Hambletonian is a race in which a gal has a chance. Only one filly ever won the Kentucky Derby and only two ever won the Preakness, but that could be because these thoroughbred classics are run in the early spring, which is not a very good time for a filly. In the Hambletonian, the fillies are usually right up there close, if they are not actually winning the trot. They've won six Hambletonians to the colts' eight. Thus there should be a lot of kitchen crockery banks raided up here Wednesday, to provide the money for mutuel tickets on Florimel, Roland Harriman's 2-year-old champion of 1940. Incidentally, only one gelding has won the race—but it was Greyhound.

Others of merit who will take part in this classic of harness racing are His Excellency, owned by W. H. Strang, a Brooklyn man, and driven by the veteran Ben White; Fast Train, owned by the chairman of the State harness racing commission, Ebby Gerry; Dunbar Bostwick's Hollyrood Anna and Merwynna, who beat Perpetual in the first heat of the Matron Stakes.

And speaking of Perpetual, if Doc Parshall can pilot it home in front, he will become the first owner ever to pilot his winner, though Doc won the Hambletonian twice with other men's horses.

Thursday's trotting derby is for 4, 5 and 6-year-olds who were Hambletonian eligibles in the years gone by. The 5-year-old Nibble Hanover, owned by Dunbar Bostwick and his sister, Mrs. Ogden Phipps, is expected to turn in a record effort if he doesn't become snarled in the traffic. He recently trotted two 1-mile heats in 1:58 ¾ and 1:59 to beat the two best competitive heats turned in by Greyhound—2:02 and 1:57¼, at Springfield, Ill., in 1936. The track at the Good Time Park is perhaps the fastest in the country, which should make for another record performance on the part of the Nibbler.

Schrafft Wins Lido Beach Club Trophy

By the Associated Press

Long Beach, N. Y., Aug. 3.—George Schrafft, of Boston, slammed his Chrissie IV over the waters of Reynolds Channel today for 1,500 points and the lead among the country's inboard motorboat racers in the New York State championship regatta.

More than 15,000 persons saw Schrafft take two firsts and a second in the 225-class heats, and then go to annex the Lido Beach Club trophy as well as the New York State title in the heavyweight class.

Jack Wood, of Detroit, won the first heat with his famous Michigan Kid, but "couped out" and was unable to continue racing. Wood turned in the fastest time of the day with a 5:04:8 in the initial 5-mile heat.

The most thrilling race of the afternoon developed between Schrafft and William H. Bourne, of Rye, N. Y., in the Lido Cup Race. The pair ran nip and tuck for nine of the 10 miles before the candy heir pulled ahead to win by 80 yards. Guy Lombardo finished third in the trophy race.

'Lippy' Is Fined $50 for Debate

Chicago, Aug. 3 (AP).—Manager Leo Durocher, of the Brooklyn Dodgers, said today that League President Ford Frick had fined him $50 for his run-in with Umpire Tom Dunn during Saturday's Dodger-Cub game.

Dunn, on the advice of Umpire Bill Stewart, reversed himself on a decision at second base, allowing the Chicago Cubs to fill the bases and go on to score three runs. Durocher argued with the umpires and was repected from the game.

61 Clubs Launch Maryland Softball Play

Baltimore, Aug. 3 (AP).—Sixty-one teams, nearly all from Baltimore, began play today in the Round-Robin State Softball Tourney on a dozen fields.

Only out-of-town team to survive the first round was the Lee Motors squad from Elkton which defeated Bethenived, of Baltimore, 13-0. A single loss eliminates an entry.

Play will continue each Sunday through August 24, at which time the finalist will meet for the championship and a free trip to Detroit, Mich., as Maryland's entry in the National Softball Tournament.

Beaver Dam Golfers Win Over Argyle

Buddy Sharkey Bows In Indian Spring Championship Play; Belote Wins Trophy

By Merrell W. Whittlesey

Beaver Dam golfers rubbed it on the visiting Argyle team yesterday and gained ample revenge for a previous defeat by drubbing the Silver Springers, 40½ to 7½ over the Landover course.

Ralph Sterling and Jim Hutchinson scored the only victory for the Argyle squad, which was shutout in a majority of the matches.

Mrs. M. A. Dent won the Mechau trophy for women at Beaver Dam with an 98-14, 84, as two tied for second one stroke back, Mrs. Charles Griffin, 111-26, 85, and Mrs. Mattison, 121-36, 85. Mrs. Ora Emge won low gross with a 96.

Fred Cross won the sweepstakes play with a 91-23, 68, to Doug Mattison's 74-5, 69. Jim Gipe snapped par figures by a shot with a gross 70. The visiting Argyle team also competed in the handicap tourney with B. Barnes winning net with 85-13, 72, and Maury Cooper, club champion, low gross with an 80.

Results of the Argle-Beaver Dam match:

Beaver Dam, 40½; Argyle, 7½

Gipe and Woodside (BD) scored 2½ points to ½ for Cooper and Murray (A); Palmer and Heimer (BD) scored 3 points to 0 for Mothershead and Scrosgins (A); Miller and B. Thompson (BD) scored 2½ points to ½ for Amaden and Barnes (A); Balestri and Kearns (BD) scored 3 points to 0 for Williams and Gibson (A); Mattison and A. Woodside (BD) scored 3 points to 0 for LeDuc and Duffy (A); F. Thompson and Bassett (BD) scored 2½ points to ½ for Manning and Lepley (A); Purdy and O'Bren (BD) scored 2½ points to ½ for L. Johnston and Beals (A); Milbourne and Burch (BD) scored 3 points to 0 for Hill and Dickaut (A); J. Johnston and Moser (BD) scored 2 points to 1 for Chamberlin and Brousseau (A); Bailey and Griffin (BD) scored 3 ponits to 0 for Bond and Dooley (A); Greene and Mansfield (BD) scored 3 points to 0 for Jett and Birkerton (A); Childs and Libbey (BD) scored 2 points to 1 for Poseon and Lawrenson (A); Blair and Weisenberger (BD) scored 2 points to 1 for Lake and Zackary (A); Smith and Wilson (BD) scored 3 points to 0 for Black and Hess (A); Boyer and Deaters (BD) scored 3 points to 0 for Terrell and Hess (A); Baumgartner and DeVeit (BD) scored ½ point to 2½ for Sterling and Hutchinson (A).

INDIAN SPRING

Jim Huntt scored a major first round upset in the Indian Spring Club championship with a 1 up victory over Buddy Sharkey, twice champion. Sharkey has been playing little golf of late, however.

Charley Malone turned in the best golf of the day, a two-under-par effort which accounted for a 5 and 4 victory over R. H. O'Malley, while Eddie Ault, medalist, and Volney Burnett, State champion, were among the initial round victors.

Championship Flight

Eddie Ault defeated Baxter Davis, 1 up; Jim Huntt defeated Buddy Sharkey, 1 up; Charles Malone defeated R. H. O'Malley, 5 and 4; Volney Burnett defeated Dick Peacock, 5 and 4; Jack Olmstead defeated Lloyd Farmer, 5 and 3; Lou Harrison defeated Paul Dobrowolski, 4 and 3; Earl Clary defeated Boyd Jaeger, 1 up, 19 holes; Dick Melvin defeated Pres Burrows, 2 up.

Second Flight

Harold Gordon defeated Ed Fitzgerald, 2 and 1. V. H. Young defeated J. B. Robinson, 5 and 4; W. L. Rice won by default; Charles Dixon won by default; John Taylor drew a bye.

Third Flight

Earl Giles defeated C. Wells, 1 up; J. B. Robertson defeated H. C. Fenwick, 3 and 2; G. Jaeger defeated Frank Mirth, 5 and 4; G. Morgan won by default.

Fourth Flight

M. Gordon defeated J. Hazer, 7 and 6; J. Feeney defeated J. McShea, 5 and 4; D. B. Maize defeated A. T. Uts, 1 up.

EAST POTOMAC

Hugh Belote, 16-year-old Tech High golfer, won the second renewal of the John Colpoys trophy play at East Potomac with a net score of 67. Belote played the nines in 41 and 40 and deducted a 14 handicap.

Miles Appelberry, winner last year, missed a tie by a single shot with 38-40, 78-10, 68. Earl Marcey was third low net scorer with 76-7, 69.

WASHINGTON

Johnny Holzberg, back as a member of Washington Golf & Country Club, turned in a low gross of 75 to pace the 18-hole sweepstakes tournament. Kenneth Paxton won low net with 80-15, 65, followed by H. E. Radcliffe, 78-12, 66; E. S. McIntyre, 89-23,66; Frank Hackett, 84-18, 66, and Dr. Richard Huffman, 78-12, 66.

CONGRESSIONAL

Handicaps were based on nine blind holes in the weekend tournament at Congressional and H. S. McDonald was the winner with 81-6, 75. G. W. Neville had 80-3, 77; T. B. Conlyn, 88-10, 78, and C. H. McClain, 84-6, 78, to complete the prize list.

BANNOCKBURN

The 72-hole medal play handicap Tom Moore Cup play was concluded at Bannockburn with R. L. Burgdorf, jr., the winner, with consecutive rounds of 85, 87, 79, 87, minus a 21 handicap each time, for a 264 stroke net total.

S. E. Mullikin, taking 13 handicap strokes from each round, and Gordon Livermore, who subtracted 22 from each 18-hole test, tied for second with 265 net totals.

Pat Martino won low gross with 76-74-74-73, 297, over the 301 total of Allen Laing, from rounds of 74-78-75-74.

The Erich Piper 36-hole event was also brought to a close yesterday with B. H. Benidt the winner, 89-77, minus a total handicap of 38 for a net score of 128. Burgdorf was second with a 130 net score and Livermore third with 131. Play was for members with handicaps of 17 to 30.

The only match completed in the women's team play for the Piper Trophy found Sadie Glanz and Mrs. Wayne Smith scoring a 4 and 3 vic-

Md. Yacht Clubs Join in Regatta Next Weekend

By the Associated Press

Oxford, Md., Aug. 3.—Officials of the Chesapeake Bay and Tred Avon Yacht Clubs have completed arrangements for their annual joint regatta here next weekend.

At stake will be the Lipton Trophy and the J. Graham Johnson Memorial Trophy for star boats, the Gaetina Bowl for Comets, and the Dr. James A. Stevens' Memorial Trophy.

The first race will be for Chesapeake Bay Yacht Club boats, starting Friday at Gibson Island and racing across the bay to Town Point. The Poker Bowl Trophy will be awarded for the best corrected time in the cruising division and another prize in the racing division.

The Red Avon Club racing program will open Friday afternoon with races for 20-foot class, division one and two boats. In quick succession, first heats will be run off for Hampton one designs, Scrappy Cats, Comets, Penguins, divison one, and Penguins, division two.

Tred Avon events will share the Saturday spotlight with first heats for the Chesapeake Bay Clubs trophies, final heats for which will be run off Sunday morning.

Kearns Seeks Drill Site For Poland

Jack (Doc) Kearns, Jack Dempsey's erstwhile manager, is due in town the early part of this week to complete arrangements with Joe Turner, local promoter, for the establishment of a training camp for his 20-year-old Jewish heavyweight ace, Bill Poland, who will fight Eddie Blunt, New York colored scrapper, in a 25-round match at Griffith Stadium on Monday, August 25.

Turner said he had ordered both Poland and Blunt to report here 10 days before the match, according to terms of the contract.

Indications are that Poland and Blunt will alternate in working indoors and outdoors. Turner's Arena, where many a champion has trained for matches here, will be used, and efforts are being made to have Tom O'Donnell, local sportsman, permit training at his Griffith Farms. It was at Griffith Farms that Freddie Steele, the then middleweight champion, drilled for his bout with Hobo Williams back in 1937.

Staunton Wins

Lynchburg, Va., Aug. 3 (AP).—The tailend Staunton Presidents dealt Lynchburg's Title Hopes a blow here today by taking both ends of a double-header 8 to 6 and 4 to 1.

Pirate Rallies Down Giants Twice, 5-4, 10-4, Earn 3rd Place

Heintzelman Knocked Out Two Times

Starts in Both Clashes; 25,688 See End of Excellent Buc Home Stand

By the Associated Press

Pittsburgh, Aug. 3.—The Pittsburgh Pirates sailed into third place in the National League and thrilled a crowd of 25,688 today by thumping the New York Giants, 5 to 4 and 10 to 4, in a double-header which closed a brilliant home stand for the Bucs.

Great relief pitching by Lloyd Ditz and Bob Klinger enabled the Pirates to come from behind in each game after Lefty Kenny Heintzelman started both games and was chased quickly by New York barrages of runs.

After the Giants scored three runs, Klinger succeeded Heintzelman in the second inning of the nightcap, which was cut to six innings by the Pennsylvania law prohibiting Sunday baseball after 6 p. m. Except for Bobe Young's sixth inning homer, Klinger was invincible.

Pitcher Bob Carpenter was chased by Umpire Ziggy Sears in the first inning of the opener when he protested too bitterly against the umpiring. He had issued four consecutive passes to force in the first Pirate run.

Persistent pecking away gave the Buccos the first game but a high-powered batting display featured by a six-run outburst in the fifth inning accounted for the second victory. Triples by Lee Handley, Arky Vaughan and two by Elbie Fletcher highlighted the 14-hit attack.

'A Bunch of the Boys Were Whoopin' It Up' . . . at the Arena

Turner's Arena Houses Fistic Hopes of Young Fighters

W. Street Palace Is Meeting Place For Managers, Fighters, and the Curious

By Tony Neri

There is one place in Washington where the sultry summer heat can be avoided—but a person must possess strong and resilient hearing apparatus to withstand the verbal sing-song of the fight crowd.

The place is Turner's Arena, local mecca of pugilism.

New York may have its Stillman's and Jersey can boast of Madame Bey's, but to the beak-busting boys of Washington the W Street arena is a shrine.

Each day the faithful flock to the temple. All are treated alike. Youngsters, past greats, and those who like to congregate with the fight mob, gather to witness the preliminary work that means so much to the fight game.

It is here that fistic hopes are born. Every boy with a pair of boxing gloves on—is a heluva fighter—every prospective bout—is a heluva match—here indeed is the Utopia of the ever-talking fight manager.

Here, too, is a body unique, a league of nations which actually operates in unison and peace. Be ye Jew, Negro, Irish, Italian or Pole—it makes no difference—if you talk the language of the fight crowd and you can withstand the spieling of the fight managers.

A typical day at the arena runs something like this: "Daddy Joe" Turner, Willie Mack and George King, open the place about 10 a. m. Mack and King have been associated with Promoter Turner since the latter's heyday as a champion wrestler. About noon Senor Gabe Menendez and Harry (The Horse) Raskin drop in and compete with the others in choice vocabulary. Woe to the man with a tin ear. Shortly afterward Dave Herman joins Raskin and Menendez, and it is then that words fly faster than a hot tip at a race track.

About 1 o'clock fighters begin operations in the ring, centered in the middle of the arena.

It is not uncommon to see a preliminary boy sparring with a former champion, or a middleweight boxing a featherweight.

Fighters Have Proteges

Buddy Scott, the transplanted Oklahoman, takes the ring while Raskin keeps time. Scott dances around before engaging Earl Lowman, New York Negro heavyweight, in three rounds of brisk action.

After the workout Scott keeps a watchful eye on his protege, Proctor Heindold, an amateur featherweight champion from Oklahoma, as the youngster goes through his drills.

Ray Landis, Phil Furr's simonpure, is seen hitting the heavy bag and over in a corner Wayne Armstrong, young Nebraska middleweight and rated by Ring Magazine as the outstanding middleweight prospect of the year, is playing a staccato on the small punching bag. Raskin puts the dimmers on Armstrong and without batting an eye says to one and all, "He's a heluva fighter."

Hill Trains Faithfully

Next to enter the ring is Jimmy Hill, 19-year-old Negro middleweight, who has been training for over a year but has never had a match. Hill is handled by "Doc" Austell, an inveterate customer of local fight gyms. The young middleweight receives the attention generally reserved for champions, but when he will engage in his first fight remains a mystery.

Norman Fleming and another featherweight engage in conversation as Howard "Cowboy" Jones, former top-ranking welterweight, sits idly by and watches the passing scene. Howard, a brother of Buddy Scott, fought many battles in the arena.

Tony Galento once refused to train in Washington for a local fight, claiming the town lacked facilities. Apparently Tony was unaware of Turner's Arena. The place is cool, it has clean dressing rooms, showers, and is an ideal place to train. And furthermore, you can't beat the atmosphere. And there's Raskin, too.

Bill Bennings

Along with the horses, jockeys, officials and customers our own Bill Bennings is taking a day off before the Maryland half-mile season gets in action again tomorrow at Cumberland. It is reported that Bill will spend the day looking for the word "winner" in a dictionary. We'll wager he won't have any trouble finding the word "dinner," although he should be thinking about the word "thinner." At any rate, Bill's column, "As The Post," will be in The Post tomorrow.

Braves Blank Reds Twice, 5 to 0, 3 to 0

By the Associated Press

Cincinnati, Aug. 3.—The seventh place Boston Braves scored a pair of shutout victories over the Cincinnati Reds today, 5 to 0 and 3 to 0.

Hefty John Hutchins, sent to the Brave by the Reds six weeks ago in a deal for Lloyd Waner, turned on his old teammates in the nightcap and held them to three scattered singles and fanned four.

The Braves battered Elmer Riddle for seven hits and three runs in seven innings, and scored two more on four hits off Joe Beggs in the opener. In the nightcap, Bucky Walters was culled for ten Brave safeties.

Dodgers Take Two From Bombers

A twin triumph was registered by the Chevy Chase Dodgers yesterday over Noland Plumbers, 8-7 and 14-1. Mike George's ninth inning homer won the opener and "Red" Poland was the star of the nightcap with a two-hit pitching performance.

Keeler Could Hit Plenty Without Flat Bat

Yesterday your correspondent invaded the darkly paneled pump room of Squire Yawkey's Jersey Street hospice on the still hunt for Mr. Hugh Duffy, the spry elf who played his first organized baseball just prior to the French and Indian war. The reason I wanted Mr. Duffy, who established the all-time major league seasonal batting record of .438 back in 1894, was that I had a letter from an elderly citizen of Los Angeles, asking a pertinent question about the now almost legendary Wee Willie Keeler.

Cunningham

It was the long-time Keeler consecutive game hitting streak that J. Rampagio DiMaggio, as they now call him in Cleveland, whacked into the everlasting discard with that recent run. The oldtimer wanted a little light on Willie Keeler and his hitting. He said, as a young fellow he distinctly remembered attending a game in Chicago where quite a row arose over the fact that Keeler was trying to use a flat bat.

On questions of that nature, we always go for Mr. Duff, since he's still as bright as a robin, and he played with all those guys.

Here is about the way the interrogation ran;

"Hugh, did you ever hear that Wee Willie Keeler used a flat bat in any games while running up that record of his?"

"No, never. He didn't need a flat bat. He could hit plenty without one."

"Well, I've got a letter from a man . . . he says, etc. . . . would it have been possible for Keeler to try a stunt such as that?"

"It would have been possible," said Hugh. "I'm not even going to say it didn't happen. Ball players were always trying to get away with something back there. They still are," he added with a chuckle. "Maybe Kee

Fred Jacoby, Jr., Captures Saranac Regatta Honors

National Pro Champion Wins Two Firsts, Two Seconds to Top Vic Scott for Crown

By the Associated Press

Saranac Lake, N. Y., Aug. 3.—The veteran Fred Jacoby, jr., North Bergen, N. J., scenic artist, easily outdistanced the field today in winning top honors at the Saranac Lake Boat Club's thirty-first annual outboard regatta.

Jacoby national pro champion for seven years, combined firsts in classes B and C and seconds in classes A and F to total 2,309 points, well ahead of his nearest competitor, Vic Scott, Forest Hills, Long Island, who compiled 1,450.

Fred Chase, Northampton, Mass., and Don Whitfield, Upper Montclair, N. J., shared third honors with 800 each. Chase captured both heats in class A and Whitfield equaled the performance in the midget class.

Fred Desmond, Short Hills, N. J., intercollegiate champion from Villanova, paced the amateur field with fourth places in classes A and B. He was followed by John Schoolcraft jr., Schenectady, who placed fourth in class C and F.

Jacoby, scoring his fourth triumph in as many years here, turned in the second fastest heat of the day when he pushed his class C racer over the four-mile course in 5:51.4, bettered only by Scott's 5:50.4 in class F.

Lyons Beats Nats, 9-0; Sox Make 18 Hits ball of the game, a bunt by Kolloway, and the White Sox went on from there to score a run on Kuhel's single to right and Kreevich's fly to Lewis. Later in the inning, hits by Wright and Appling filled the bases with one out, but Sundra fanned Hoag to get out of trouble.

They picked up another run against Sundra in the second when Tresh made the first of his four straight hits, a double to left. Lyons promptly scored him with the first of his four hits, a single to right. In the fifth, they came up with two more runs and knocked Sundra out of the box.

Wright opened that fifth with a single to right and with one out, Sundra hit Hoag on the foot. Then Kennedy, Tresh and Lyons singled in succession and the Sox had two runs. When Sundra walked Kolloway to fill the bases with two out, Zuber got the pitching job and there was no more scoring, for a while.

The Sox started cuffing Zuber around in the seventh and got three runs on four hits after Early fumbled Hoag's bunt in front of the plate. Then followed four hits in a row—by Kennedy, Tresh, Lyons and Kolloway. Lyons' blow was a droopy double to short left.

It was in the eighth that the White Sox performed the feat of getting two runs without a hit. Kreevich walked, stole second with one out, and after Appling walked Kreevich teamed with him in a double steal. Hoag's fly scored Kreevich from third and moved Appling up a base. Appling scored on a passed ball with the Sox's ninth run of the day.

The Nats must have been playing a defensive game. They didn't score any runs.

Two Games in M.A. Softball Tonight

Gilly Young's hardhitting Plaza Wine and Liquor ten, which numbers Senate Beer among its victims, makes its debut in the third annual MidAtlantic softball tournament tonight in Ballston Stadium when it meets Baltimore's topnotch Cummins Construction ten at 9:15 as play progresses to the second round. The Wineman will send Billy Cross to the mound in an effort to stop the Baltimoreans, also making their first start in the tourney.

In the opening game at 8 o'clock, Senate Beer, defending champions, gets its second tough assignment in three days, facing Carr Bros. and Boswell, first half champions of the Prince Georges County League.

Miller Furniture Nine Wins Capital City 'A' Feature

Jacobsen Florists Lose, 9 to 0; Frank Watt Wins for Miller; Heurich Defeats Naiman

Second-half action in the National City Baseball League yesterday was featured by Miller Furniture again, the powerful "A" section favorite handing Jacobsen Florists a 9-0 defeat on the Ellipse. First Ottie Printz and then Redinger were sent to the mound by the Florists, but neither could stop Miller slugging which accounted for 13 safe blows.

Frank Watt went all the way for Miller, scattering six safeties and fanning seven. He was never in danger of losing as his teammates increased his working margin in each of the first four frames and in the ninth.

In the only other "A" Section clash Heurich indicated it will be a serious contender by stopping Naiman Photos, 5-2. Johnny Murnane's six-hit pitching, along with the hitting of Cabell, Posnack, Knight and Miller proved too much for the losers. Warren Earhardt, Naiman's hurler, tossed the victors a total of 11 hits.

In the "B" Section hostilities were topped by the Ninth and New York Avenue Lunch's 18-3 routing of Solomon's Market. Baulsir was credited with a no-hitter for the six-inning duration of the game.

Junior hostilities saw Central Branch nine, B. C. W., regain a chance for the first half title when it turned back the Cardinals, 7-2, in the playoff of a postponed game. Two-hit pitching by Ben Harrell decided the battle in Central's favor.

Polling Places For Arlington Primary Listed

Arlington Precinct—Patrick Henry School, 700 S. Fillmore Street; Ballston—Firehouse, Ninth and N. Stuart Streets; Cherrydale—School auditorium, N. Wilson Street and Lee Highway; Clarendon, First Precinct—Matthew Fontaine School, 3550 Wilson Boulevard; Clarendon, Second Precinct—Firehouse, Tenth and N. Hudson Streets; East Falls Church—Reeves Real Estate Office, Lee Highway; Glencarlyn—School building; Lyon Park—Community House, N. Fillmore Street and Pershing Drive; Rosslyn—Woodrow Wilson School, 2002 Wilson Boulevard; Virginia Highlands Firehouse, 501 S. Twenty-third Street.

Polls will be open from 5:12 a. m. to 7:15 p. m.—from runrise to sunset, as required by State law.

Separate ballots will be distributed at the various polling places, carrying the names of candidates for the County Democratic Committee. There are only 19 candidates for the 222 committee posts. The three remaining posts will be filled by the committee after the election. The committee consists of two representatives from each precinct.

The following are the candidates whose names will appear on the ballots:

Arlington Precinct, Homer G. Bauserman and Arthur C. Stickley; Ballston, Thomas J. Crack and Mrs. Pearl E. Connor; Carne, Alvin E. Fitzhugh and Harry A. Grant; Cherrydale, Mrs. Mary Mackey and Charles B. Meyer; Clarendon, No. 1, Maynard M. Carlisle and J. Thomas Manning; Clarendon, No. 2, Mrs. Beulah Friess and J. Maynard Magruder; East Falls Church, Mrs. Ruth Marcey and Charles R. Fenwick; Glencarlyn, Nixon A. Brewer; Lyon Park, Mrs. Kathryn T. Dinges; Rossyln, Mrs. Beulah S. Goss; Virginia Highlands, J. Byron Brooks and Charles Harrison Mann, jr.

Hanrahan Reports Progress in Zone Plan

Arlington County Manager Frank C. Hanrahan yesterday reported that he had communicated with the International City Managers' Association to obtain assistance in completing the county's master zoning plan.

He said the plan has advanced progressively, with the urban land use research and map being 80 per cent completed; the lot area map 80 per cent completed; the major thoroughfare plan 95 per cent completed; the park and parkway plan roughly completed; the subdivision restriction research 90 per cent completed; and information on the existing zoning map readily available to be compiled.

"Regardless of the master zoning plan not being completed," Hanrahan declared, "we are getting 98 per cent cooperation from all the builders, who are operating as though the plan now existed in its final form. With respect to present and future planning, Arlington County is far ahead of similar communities."

Services Held In Columbia, S. C., For Sen. Lumpkin

Columbia, S. C., Aug. 3 (AP).—Funeral services were held at Trinity Episcopal Church here this afternoon for Senator Alva M. Lumpkin, who died at Washington Friday after serving ten days of his term.

The congressional party which came here for the rites included Senators Smith, of South Carolina; Hatch, of New Mexico; Kilgore, of West Virginia; Wiley, of Wisconsin; Eastland, of Mississippi, and the South Carolina delegation.

Lumpkin took office July 22 to serve until December 8, following his appointment by Gov. Burnet R. Maybank. He succeeded Senator James F. Byrnes, appointed to the Supreme Court.

Two Guards End Vigil at Tomb Of E. B. McLean

A 24-hour vigil at the tomb of Edward Beale McLean, maintained by two guards since the burial last Tuesday of the former publisher of The Post, will be ended tonight.

The vigil, a member of the family explained last night, is a family custom, held for its deceased of three generations at the McLean mausoleum in Rock Creek Cemetery.

A cemetery official recalled that vigils have been maintained there at times for prominent persons notably in 1932 for Joseph Leiter, financier, who once cornered the wheat market.

Official Notices

COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF Columbia, July 25, 1941. A public hearing having been held on June 30, 1941, by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia in the matter of closing certain street and alley areas in the District of Columbia, as hereinafter described, and the said Commissioners being satisfied as to the equity, justice and advisability of said closings, and that the same are not detrimental to the public interests nor to the interests of abutting property owners, NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN that the said Commissioners have prepared the following order: "Ordered that pursuant to the provisions of Public Act No. 307, approved December 15, 1932, the street and alley areas as shown in green on plats filed in the office of the Surveyor of the District of Columbia, and numbered as Maps 2523 and 2524, are hereby ordered CLOSED, same to take effect on and after AUGUST 25, 1941, the title to the land contained in said areas so closed to revert to the abutting property owners, as shown on said maps; the said areas hereby ordered closed being described as follows: 1. Closing 8th Street between G and H Streets, S.W., and closing H Street between 7th and 9th Streets, S.W. 2. Closing E Street between Minnesota Avenue and 36th Street; closing 34th Street between Minnesota Avenue and E Street; closing Anacostia Road between F Place and E Street; and closing of alleys in Square 5445; all in the Southeast section of the District of Columbia." Any and all parties interested must file objections, if any, in writing, to said closings within thirty days after the date of this publication, as shown at the beginning thereof, otherwise said order shall become effective on August 25, 1941, and the street and alley areas, as herein described, shall on and after said date become closed, in accordance with the provisions of said Act. ODD BODKINS

WHAT'S THAT GADGET STRAPPED ON YOUR SUITCASE?
I DON'T KNOW! MR. WHITTLE MADE IT FOR ME OUT OF A PIECE OF IRON! HE DIDN'T TELL ME WHAT IT WAS!
IT'S A LIGHTNING ROD, BOYS, IN CASE YOU DIDN'T KNOW!
GOT A MATCH, GEORGE?
NO, CHARLIE! MAYBE THIS KID HAS ONE!
I NEVER CARRY MATCHES!!! GRANDMA WON'T LET ME!
MAYBE YOU COULD RUN IN THAT STORE AND GET SOME!
THAT WON'T BE NECESSARY! IF YOU'LL STOP, I'LL GET OUT AND RUB TWO STICKS TOGETHER!
WAIT A MINUTE! YOU'VE GOT MY SUITCASE AND ALL MY PERSONAL BELONGINGS!
WE'LL WAIT FOR YOU AT THE CORNER OF 4TH STREET, BETWEEN TWO O'CLOCK NEXT JANUARY! HAVE A FIRE GOING!

JOE PALOOKA — The New Assistant — BY HAM FISHER

SO HE WANTED TO HELP TRAIN JOE, THAT'S VERY FUNNY SERGEANT.
HOW DO YOU LIKE THE NERVE?
DO YOU WANT TO HAVE SOME FUN?
SURE, WHAT'S THE GAG?
SAY LEEMY I SAW RAY. HE THINKS YOU MIGHT HELP TRAIN JOE.
WELL I'M A MONKEY'S AUNT LIZZIE! THAT'S SWELL SARGE! I'M READY.
PRIVATE LEEMY REPORTIN' TO HELP ASSIT TRAIN JOE. I'M GLAD YOU GUYS GOT SOME SENSE!
FINE. PUT ON A SWEAT SHIRT AND WE'LL START RIGHT IN.

WINNIE WINKLE — The Same Difference — BY BRANNER

BEGINNING ONE WEEK FROM TODAY, YOU CAN HAVE YOUR VACATION, WINNIE!
OH, THANKS, MR. BIBBS!
WHERE ARE YOU GOING ON YOUR VACATION, WINNIE?
YEAH, TH' MOUNTAINS OR TH' SEASHORE?
GOSH, I DON'T KNOW YET-- I HAVEN'T MADE UP MY MIND!
WHY NOT GO OUT TO THE ROCKIES IN THE NORTHWEST? THE SCENERY THERE IS BEAUTIFUL!
AW, I DON'T KNOW ABOUT THAT--- --TAKE AWAY TH' MOUNTAINS, TREES AND LAKES, AND IT'S JUST TH' SAME AS ANY OTHER PLACE!

NAPOLEON AND UNCLE ELFY — BY CLIFFORD McBRIDE

JANE ARDEN — Escape — BY MONTE BARRETT AND RUSSELL ROSS

WHEN JANE TRIED TO STOP THE ESCAPING MURDERER, HE GRABBED HER AND USED HER AS A SHIELD TO KEEP THE INSPECTOR FROM OPENING FIRE—
IF YOU SHOOT, YOU'LL HIT THE GIRL!
YOU CAN'T GET AWAY WITH THIS!
STEADY, MY GIRL— BETTER QUIT STRUGGLING OR I'LL BREAK YOUR ARM!
WHY, YOU—
WHAT GOES ON HERE?
LET THAT GIRL ALONE!
ROBBERS IN THE JEWELRY STORE—I'VE GOT THIS ONE—YOU GET THE POLICE!

SUPERMAN — Enter Slag — BY JERRY SIEGEL AND JOE SHUSTER

THRU A MISCALCULATION, COKER HAS SLAIN HIS HIRELING, THE PSEUDO-SUPERMAN, AND PERISHED HIMSELF. ONCE AGAIN, A MEETING OF THE "SCIENTISTS OF SUDDEN DEATH" IS IN SESSION...
FIRST CARLOS—THEN BLOCK—AND NOW COKER....THREE OF OUR NUMBER HAVE FAILED THUS FAR....
AND SLAG IS NEXT. WHAT DO YOU THINK OF YOUR PROSPECTS FOR SUCCESS NOW, SLAG?
IT MAY AMUSE YOU TO LEARN THAT I AM HIGHLY OPTIMISTIC. I MIGHT-EVEN GO FURTHER AND STATE THAT I AM CERTAIN THAT I, AND NOT SUPERMAN, WILL EMERGE TRIUMPHANT FROM THE FRAY!
SO THOUGHT ALL THE OTHERS! AND WHAT REASON HAVE YOU FOR YOUR OPTIMISM?
MERELY THIS— A FUNDAMENTAL LAW OF HUMAN NATURE WILL BE UPON MY SIDE!
YOU INTEREST ME! EXPLAIN!
THERE WILL BE NO EXPLANATION. PERHAPS LATER. YOU SEE, I AM A LONE WOLF. I NOT ONLY LIKE TO WORK ALONE—BUT—I ALSO PREFER TO KEEP MY PLANS TO MYSELF!
HERE'S LUCK TO YOU, SLAG— YOU MAY NEED IT!

MR. CHURCHILL AND THE BATH

PROBABLY THE WORLD'S GREATEST DEVOTEE OF DIRECT ACTION IS WINSTON CHURCHILL. WHEN HE DECIDED HE'D LIKE A BATHROOM EXACTLY LIKE THE LUXURIOUS ONE HE ENCOUNTERED IN A CINCINNATI HOTEL DURING A LECTURE TOUR, HE IMMEDIATELY TELEPHONED ACROSS THE ATLANTIC TO HALT REMODELLING WORK GOING ON AT HIS HOUSE SO THIS ONE COULD BE COPIED.

BOO!
MAYBE IT WAS TO FRIGHTEN THE ENEMY —MAYBE TO BUCK HIMSELF UP. ANYWAY, ITALY'S COUNT CIANO, AS HEAD OF A BOMBING SQUADRON IN THE ETHIOPIAN WAR, WORE THIS SKULL AND CROSSBONES EMBROIDERED ON HIS JACKET.

CHEESE CAKE A LA FRANÇAIS

THE LAST TIME WE SAW PARIS, THOSE TIME-HONORED BUT SHAPELY LEGS OF MISTINGUETT WERE STILL TWINKLING ACROSS THE STAGE. AT 60 PLUS, SHE STILL HAS 'EM INSURED!

One of the most pleasantly surprised persons in the broadcasting business today is the gentleman named William L. Shirer, whom you hear over WJSV and the Columbia network every night in the news program known as "The World Today."

For to date more than 340,000 copies of Mr. Shirer's book, "Berlin Diary," have been sold and Alfred Knopf, the publisher, also rather pleased, reports that it is selling more copies at a faster rate than any book Knopfs have put out in their 25 years of publishing.

What makes it more pleasant to Shirer is the fact that, honestly, he never expected the book of his experiences as C. B. S.'s correspondent in Germany to be a best seller. He says that while he was polishing the diary up for publication, one of the current best-sellers was a book telling "inside" stories about Germany, full of all sorts of blood and thunder episodes.

"That made me think that mine wouldn't go over," he says, "because I had no blood and thunder tales to tell." But, not too optimistically as far as public reception was concerned, he went ahead with the publication, and now, as we said, he's pretty glad he did.

Even now Shirer is fairly amazed and modest about the thing. When you ask him how he accounts for the book's success he says: "I suppose it was a combination of timing, material—and some luck."

Weather Conditions

Forecasts
For the District of Columbia—Moderately warm weather Monday and Tuesday, rather cool at night, mostly clear sky; gentle northerly winds becoming variable.
Conditions
Showers and local thunderstorms developed over portions of New England Sunday afternoon; otherwise fair weather with mostly clear sky continues over northeastern United States with maximum temperatures below 80 degrees. Scattered thundershowers continue within the warm moist air mass over the Gulf States with some rainfall locally heavy in Louisiana and South Carolina. The greatest amounts were 2.99 inches at Arcadia, La.; 2.26 inches at Texarkana, Ark., and 1.31 inches at Florence, S. C. The unseasonable hot weather continues in Texas and the central Plains States and has spread northward to the Northern Plains States with maximum temperatures Sunday afternoon ranging from 98 to 104 degrees. Warm weather prevails also over the western Plateau States but cloudy, rainy weather over Oregon and Washington has resulted in much lower temperatures. Showers and thunderstorms have developed over Arizona and New Mexico.

Republicans Plan New Bill on Prices

Administration Measure Designed To Socialize Industry, Wolcott Says

By Nicholas P. Gregory

Asserting that the Roosevelt Administration's price control bill is "in line with the Tugwellian idea of socialization of industry," Representative Wolcott, ranking Republican member of the House Banking and Currency Committee, disclosed last night that Republicans will draft a substitute price control measure.

Wolcott's statement was made as Representative Steagall (Democrat), of Alabama, chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee, completed preparations to begin two weeks of hearings today on the bill. Leon Henderson, Price Control Administrator, will be the first witness.

Speaking as chairman of a newly-organized Republican Price Control Study Committee, announced yesterday by Representative Martin, Republican floor leader, Wolcott said that his group would meet in the next three days to study the Administration's price control proposals.

"My own opinion is that we cannot control inflation by controlling prices alone," Wolcott asserted, as he revealed that his committee would immediately begin a study of credit and monetary suggestions offered to Congress last January by the Federal Reserve Board.

Safeguards Negated, He Says

The Republicans will study the effect of the velocity of private credit on inflation; gold reserves as they affect the price structure; gold purchases; demonitization of gold and silver, and excess reserves.

He said he was not surprised that the "Emergency Price-Control Act of 1941," did not include any of the safeguards against inflation proposed by the Federal Reserve Board, asserting that these proposals were negated, inasmuch as Congress had granted President Roosevelt powers to devalue the dollar, for example, one power opposed by the Reserve Board.

Wolcott declared that the anti-inflation and price control recommendations which his group will draw up will be along the line of credit control measures advocated by the Reserve Board. Among these suggestions were a request for new powers by the Reserve Board to raise bank reserve requirements, affecting both State and National banks; repeal of the President's power to devalue the dollar, and abolition of the Thomas amendment under which the Treasury could issue $3,000,000,000 of "greenback" currency.

Martin Warns of Danger

Martin, in announcing the formation of the Republican Price Control Study Committee, said that "it is obvious we cannot tolerate runaway prices in the Nation. "There is undeniable danger that price rises might become not only excessive, but very dangerous to the economic security of the country. On the other hand, there exists grave danger, if the administration of price controls were not very wisely, and very carefully exercised, American farmers might find themselves squeezed; American labor might find itself damaged; those with fixed incomes, and those who work on a salary basis might find themselves ruined, or enduring great and unnecessary hardships. Industry itself, which must provide employment for the people, could be wrecked by unwise price control administration."

It is reported that some members ofC ongress look with favor upon some curb on wages, which the labor organizations oppose.

Other members of the committee headed by Mr. Wolcott are Charles L. Gifford, Massachusetts; Fred L. Crawford, Michigan; Ralph A. Gamble, New York; Robert W. Kean, New Jersey; Jessie Sumner, Illinois; Frederick C. Smith, Ohio; John C. Kunkel, Pennsylvania; Thomas Rolph, California; Charles S. Dewey, Illinois; J. Edgar Chenoweth, Colorado; John Jennings, jr., Tennessee; Karl M. Le Compte, Iowa; J. Harry McGregor, Ohio; Edward H. Rees, Kansas.

Meanwhile, a Foreign Policy Association report made public yesterday said that every food rationing edict, price control ruling or industrial regulation adopted in Great Britain under the pressure of the war effort simply "creates the need for some additional element of restriction." James Frederick Green, a research associate of the Foreign Policy Association, wrote the report under the title of "Britain's War Economy, 1940-41."

Jersey Ship Union Accepts Mediation Pact

By the Associated Press

Newark, N. J., Aug. 3.—Employes today rescinded a secret ballot decision and accepted Defense Mediation Board recommendations for a working contract at the Federal Shipbuilding and Drydock Co. plant in Kearny, busy on $493,000,000 worth of war and merchant ship orders.

John Green, international president of the Industrial Union of Marine and Shipbuilding Workers of America, announced after a three-hour closed meeting of Local 16 that 6,000 members had voted almost unanimously for the contract with one minor exception.

Today's ballot came as the local met to decide whether strike action was warranted on the basis of the earlier rejection of identical proposals by a small majority of 5,000 workers who balloted secretly last week. The local claims 14,000 members of the 16,000 employed at Federal, a United States steel subsidiary.

Recommendations accepted, Green said, included a modified union shop, vacation adjustments and a 12 per cent wage increase already paid by the company retroactive to June 24. A committee will meet with the firm within 48 hours to seek arbitration of the union's demands for reclassification of 1,500 workers, only unsettled point, he added.

Green predicted the settlement would have a favorable effect on negotiations in several other Eastern seaboard yards. Peter Flynn, vice president of Local 16, asserted last week negotiations on both coasts had been delayed pending the outcome of the local's demand for a complete union shop.

Zone Pact Ratified

Tampa, Fla., Aug. 3 (AP).—The Gulf Coast Metal Trades Council of the American Federation of Labor ratified today a two-year zone labor agreement for ten shipyards along the Gulf Coast, contingent on supplementary agreements between individual yards and their employes.

John P. Frey, president of the metal trades department of the A. F. L., said all yards except the Tampa Shipbuilding Co. so far had failed to reach supplementary agreements, and the case probably would go to the National Mediation Board.

Senate to Vote Today or Tomorrow on Bill To Retain Selects; Walsh Denounces Proposal

While the Senate prepared to vote late today or tomorrow on legislation extending the Selective Service period from one year to 30 months, Senator Walsh (Democrat), of Massachusetts, continued the fight on the resolution by declaring that its adoption would break faith with the service men and their families.

While leading foes of the measure concede that it will be approved by the Senate, especially in view of recent threatening moves by Japan in the Pacific, Senator Walsh, chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee, was bitter in his denunciation of the proposal.

He charged in a statement that the Army general staff merely had postponed asking Congress for authority to send troops outside the Western Hemisphere "to quiet opposition" to the request for authority to retain selectees, National Guardsmen and reservists in service beyond the present stipulated one year.

Russell Would Add Year

While Walsh said it was clear that Army heads "desired to have Congress repeal the present prohibition against sending draftees outside the Western Hemisphere," Senator Hill, of Alabama, Democratic whip in charge of the resolution, said that he knew of no such request being contemplated.

Representing what he said was a "middle-of-the-road" viewpoint, Senator Russell (Democrat), of Georgia, told the Associated Press he favored adding only one year, instead of 18 months, to the present service period of one year.

"I don't think it should be necessary to keep any man in service more than two years," he said. "If they have to stay two and one-half years, I am afraid that some of them will never get readjusted to civilian life."

Calls Promise Implicit

Walsh contended that the bill as it now reads would deal a blow to the principle of rotation of service for citizen soldiers. He argued for maintenance of an adequate "professional" army, with pay high enough to induce volunteering. This army he would have backed up by a large reserve or people's army to be given terms of training.

"No one," he said, "can seriously question the fact that the draftees and their families relied upon the promises that after 12 months in camp they would be returned to their places in civil life. This promise was implicit in the Congressional debate a year ago, and this promise was repeated by the President when he presided over the drawing of the first draft numbers.

"And with respect to the question of what might happen to them if we went to war, they were promised that the national defense program was designed to insure avoidance of war, and that we should not, in any event, seek war.

"Another fact that cannot be disputed is that the Selective Service Act was put through Congress under false pretenses that are now unmasked. It was represented as a bill giving military training for a 12-month period to a large number of civilians and thereby in the course of time create a large body of civilian reserves.

Plan for Standing Army

"Now it is revealed to be a measure for maintaining for an indefinite period a large standing draft army of indefinite numbers and with no distinction between the services of the conscript civilian soldiers and the Regular Army volunteers.

"We now know that the Selective Service Act was not a measure for universal or semiuniversal military training. It was not, as promised a year ago, a measure for evenly distributing the responsibilities of citizenship or the burdens and hardships of national defense and if worse came to worse the risk of life itself.

"It turns out to be a lottery where one man out of a hundred is taken from his home and family if his number is drawn, and he is physically fit, and put into uniform and camp for conversion into a professional soldier and for service, perhaps in a foreign land, not for a few months, but for years to come—no one knows how many years."

AIRPORT DINING STARTS TONIGHT. The public is invited to come out and enjoy the "informal opening" of the Washington Airport dining room this evening. There'll be a number of official parties, but plenty of room will be reserved for Mr. and Mrs. John Q. Public who may dine happily while watching the big transport planes land and take off to all points of the compass.

The airport dining room is a masterpiece of modern color and line. Three walls are of clear glass, command entrancing views of the Potomac, the landing field and Washington. Smooth and clear-cut lines mark the interior of brown rift-oak veneers, sky blue and grayed stainless steel. These cool blue, gray and brown tints are repeated in upholsteries and hangings. An outside terrace permits a closer view of the air field . . . Cuisine is comparable to that of the best hotels and is superintended by Chef "Papa" Jarrin . . . There'll be a "formal opening" later when the matter of beverage permits is finally ironed out. But in the meantime the airport dining room will be open for both luncheon and dinner beginning tomorrow.

Today's star event is the opening of the Four Senators at Mayfair. These accomplished young fellows have graced many of Manhattan's best spots. They sing in French, Spanish, German, Italian and Russian—a feat not to be matched by any of the Senators at the Capitol, even their new crooner, Senator O'Daniel of Texas.

THIS WEEK'S SHOWS. Shoreham Terrace. Gautier's Steeplechase, the midget circus of dogs, ponies and monkeys, returns tonight. Maurice and Cordoba enter their seventh week. New will be Lund and Lund, the "Symphony in Balance."

Casino Royal. Dancers LeBrun and Campbell, who combine ballroom and adagio technique, will head the show. There'll also be Reginus, a juggler, who performs in the sensational Serge Flash manner. The Dance Cocktails will do new parade and swing numbers.

Lotus. Four beautiful trained collies, called "Betty and Her Playmates," will be among the Lotus stars this week. Ben and Jean promise startling dances, including some authentic Apache roughhousing. The cause of acrobatics will be served by George Wayne and Glenn Marlin.

CELEBRITIES AT BURTS. David Sarnoff, head man of the Radio Corporation of America, and Jack Dempsey recently had customers staring and twittering at Burt's Trans-Lux . . . Walter Colston, national commander of the Rainbow Division of the American Legion, also attracted much attention as he entered to join the big party given in his honor.

"WE TWO," the Anchor Room's new and delightful pair, are a click hit. Kathleen O'Dea, the girl half of the team, used to play bass with Phil Spitalny's orchestra. Clyde Kissinger, the boy half, has written several giggle-provoking if slightly naughty ditties. Ask him to do his newest opus, "Four Nights' Experience."

"MISS VIRGINIA," who will represent the Old Dominion at the Atlantic City beauty pageant, will be chosen on the good ship Mount Vernon of the Wilson Line Wednesday, August 13. Beauty Impresario Al Stern tells us that at least 20 Virginia beauties who've won local contests all over the State will parade in the finals on the S. S. Mount Vernon, where "Miss Washington" was selected a few weeks ago. It is expected that the judges' committee will include members of the Washington press as well as the beauty experts of the Virginia dailies.

Highly exciting will be the finals of the Neptune Room "Impersonators' Nights" tomorrow eve. These events have uncovered some truly brilliant talent and the judges are faced with a mind-cracking task. Finalists include Dick Leslie, Ruth Wallace, Bill Coleman, Bernie Millstein and Don Buckley, with Jack Parker as an extra added starter.

RIVIERA BOATING. Saxist Bob Holben and drummer Bill Chisholm of Pete Macias' Lounge Riviera band, are going in for water sports, but importantly. Bill has bought a 38-foot former Coast Guard boat, is living in a state of perpetual fright lest the Government take it away from him. Bob has acquired a 20-foot speed boat. This reminds of the gay days when Maestro Pete used to have a house boat that he towed up and down the river with a cabin cruiser, stopping at all advisable (and some inadvisable) points. Talk about your floating palaces!

RUTH WALLACE, the "girl Gene Krupa," who'll be among the finalists at the Neptune Room's concluding "Impersonators' Night" tomorrow

VISITING ENTERTAINERS. Eileen George spent her last evening in town singing duets with Eve Knight in the King Cole Room. It was too, too beautiful and a lot of fun, too . . . Visiting in Hi Hat and greeting old friends by the score was Dick Reger, their former singing emcee. He was persuaded to do one of his hill billy specials.

PUGATSKY OF THE PLYMOUTH. Maxim Pugatsky, the Plymouth's new star violinist, was a member of the National String Quartet that inaugurated the famous Coolidge concerts at the Library of Congress. Later he acted as R-K-O musical director in New York City, made an excursion into movieland at the studios at Astoria, Long Island. He writes poetry, has had many sonnets published.

"You Are My Sunshine," that demented cowboy number, is being given a great whirl by Ralph Cannon and Mel Henderson of the Rainbow Room band. Leader Milton Davis wears an expression of pain while it's going on, but the customers love it.

OF MELODY MAKERS. Prize possession of the Starlight Roof's Dick Wilson is a collection of Mexican music given to him by Winthrop Rockefeller after a Pan-American tour . . . Glen Echo's Adele Van is going to be a bachelor girl. Her family has moved West because of her father's transfer . . . Russ Cullen of the Pall Mall Room is vacationing in Indiana . . . Dick Koons of the Mayflower Lounge practices shorthand between musical groups. . . . Oscar Heintze of Restaurant "823" is the owner of a new home out near the end of New Hampshire Avenue in Maryland.
